LINGUISTIC SURVEY OF INDIA.

SYSTEM OF TRANSLITERATION ADOPTED.

A.—For the Deva-nagari alphabet, and others related to it—

त्रa, आ $ar{a}$, इi, ई $ar{\imath}$, उu, ऊ $ar{u}$, ऋ $ar{r}i$, एe, ए $ar{e}$, ऐai, आo, च cha क् chha ज ja भाjha जña ਬ gha ङ na क ka गgaद da ਜ ta ध dha न na य tha ह dha र ta र tha \mathbf{g} daM na H bha H ma व va or wa ৰ ba ₹ ra ल laफ pha य ya प pa \mathbf{z} laæ lha. ढ rha N śa ष sha स 80 ₹ ha ड ra

Visarga (:) is represented by h, thus क्रमश: kramaśah. Anuswāra (') is represented by m, thus सिंह simh, वंश vamś. In Bengali and some other languages it is pronounced ng, and is then written ng.; thus राष्ट्र bangśa. Anunāsika or Chandra-bindu is represented by the sign over the letter nasalized, thus में mē.

B.—For the Arabic alphabet, as adapted to Hindustānī—

Tanwin is represented by n, thus i_{jj} fauran. Alif-i maq \tilde{u} ra is represented by \tilde{a} ;— thus, \tilde{u} \tilde

In the Arabic character, a final silent h is not transliterated,—thus بنده banda.

When pronounced, it is written,—thus, تُناه gunāh.

Vowels when not pronounced at the end of a word, are not written in transliteration. Thus, बन ban, not bana. When not pronounced in the middle of a word or only slightly pronounced in the middle or at the end of a word, they are written in small characters above the line. Thus (Hindī) देखता dēkhatā, pronounced dēkhtā; (Kāśmīrī) चूह के tsah; कर्ज़ kar", pronounced kor; (Bihārī) देखिय dēkhath.

- C.—Special letters peculiar to special languages will be dealt with under the head of the languages concerned. In the meantime the following more important instances may be noted:—
 - (a) The ts sound found in Marāṭhī (ব), Puṣḥtō (১), Kāśmīrī (ৣ, বু), Tibetan (ঠ:), and elsewhere, is represented by ts. So, the aspirate of that sound is represented by tsh.
 - (b) The dz sound found in Marāṭhī (ज), Puṣḥtō (♠), and Tibetan (੬) is represented by dz, and its aspirate by dzh.
 - (c) Kāśmīrī ্ (জ্) is represented by ñ.
 - (d) Sindhī في, Western Panjābī (and elsewhere on the N.-W. Frontier) نتر, and Puṣḥtō ن or ware represented by n.
 - (e) The following are letters peculiar to Puṣḥtō:—

 $\tip \tau \text{ts}$ or $\dz$, according to pronunciation; $\dagge d; $\tau \text{ts}$ or $\dagge a$, according to pronunciation; $\dagge d; $\tau \text{ts}$ or $\dagge n$, according to pronunciation; $\dagge n$, $\dagge n$, according to pronunciation; $\dagge n$, $\dagge n$.
 - (f) The following are letters peculiar to Sindhi:—

D.—Certain sounds, which are not provided for above, occur in transcribing languages which have no alphabet, or in writing phonetically (as distinct from transliterating) languages (such as Bengali) whose spelling does not represent the spoken sounds. The principal of these are the following:—

 \vec{a} , represents the sound of the a in all.

The semi-consonants peculiar to the Muṇḍā languages are indicated by an apostrophe. Thus k', t', p', and so on.

E.—When it is necessary to mark an accented syllable, the acute accent is used. Thus in $(\underline{Kh} \bar{o} w \bar{a}r)$ ásistai, he was, the acute accent shows that the accent falls on the first, and not, as might be expected, on the second syllable.

BIHĀRĪ.

Bihārī means properly the language of Bihar, and is spoken over nearly the whole of that Province. It is spoken also outside its limits, but it is fitly called by the above name; for not only is it, as a matter of fact, specially the language of Bihar, but also the only one of its dialects which has received any literary culture is peculiar to the north of that province. On the west, Bihārī is spoken in the Eastern districts of the Province of Agra, and even in a small portion of Oudh. On the south it is spoken on the two plateaux of Chota Nagpur. Roughly it covers an area of 90,000 square miles, and is the language of 36,000,000 people. It extends from the lower ranges of the Himalayas on the North to Singhbhum on the South, and from Manbhum on the South-east to Basti on the North-west. Within the area in which it is spoken are the two great cities of Benares and Patna.

Bihārī is bounded on the North by the Tibeto-Burman Languages of the Himalayas, on the East by Bengali, on the South by Orivā, and on the West by the Chhattīsgarhī, Baghēlī, and Awadhī dialects of Eastern Hindī. It is the most Western of the languages which form the Eastern Group of the Indo-Aryan Vernaculars.

Bihārī has hitherto been classed as belonging to the Mediate Group of these vernaculars, being thus brought into close relationship with Eastern Hindī, Baghēlī, and Chhattīsgaṛhī. Further investigation has, however, shown that this classification cannot be correct. It certainly belongs to the same group as Bengali, Oṛiyā, and Assamese. It is true that the nationalities who speak it are historically connected with the United Provinces and not with Bengal. All their family ties, all their traditions, point to the West and not to the East. But at present our affair is not with ethnic relations, but with the facts of grammar, and, taking grammar as the test, there can be no doubt either as to the origin or affiliation of Bihārī. Like Bengali, Oṛiyā, and Assamese, it is a direct descendant, perhaps the most direct of the descendants, of the old form of speech known as Māgadhī Prakrit, and has so much in common with them in its inflexional ystem that it would almost be possible to make one grammar for all the four languages.

In order to show this, it will be necessary to give a brief comparative sketch of the Bihārī compared with Bengali. Grammars of Bihārī and of Bengali, its neighbour to the East. Bihārī, as we go westward, more and more departs from the standard of Bengali, and approaches that of the other languages of the United Provinces. I shall therefore take, for the purposes of comparison, the dialect, Maithilī, which is situated on the East of the Bihārī tract, and which is therefore most near to Bengali. I shall show, not only the principal points in which Maithilī agrees with Bengali, but also those in which it differs from it in favour of its Western neighbour Eastern Hindī.

In regard to pronunciation, Bihārī occupies a middle place between Bengali and Eastern Hindī. Nothing is so characteristic of Bengali as its pronunciation of the vowel a and of the consonant s. The first is sounded like the o in the English word not, and as it is of frequent occurrence, this note gives the predominating tone-colour of a Bengali sentence. In Maithili, the same vowel has also a broad sound, not so broad as in Bengali, but still distinctly broader than the sound which the vowel takes in Central Hindostan. It is something between the u in cub and the o in cob. As we go westward, this broad pronunciation is gradually lost, till it entirely disappears in the most Westerly dialect of Bihārī,—Bhojpurī. As regards the letter s, the ancient Māgadhī was unable to use the sound, and substituted for it a sound approaching that of an English sh. On the other hand, the Prakrit-speaking tribes more to the West could not say this sh, and substituted for it s. Here Bengali and Eastern Hindi exactly represent the ancient state of affairs. The Bengalis, like the men of Gilead, say 'shibboleth,' while the inhabitants of Hindostan, like the Ephraimites, can only say 'sibboleth.' Here Bihari has thrown in its lot with the latter. The sound of the English sh is non-existent in all its dialects. I have said that Bengali turns every s into sh; but this is only true of the Standard form of speech. The line of distinction between the s-sound and the sh-sound is not quite coincident with the language-boundary. North-Western Bengali, where it marches with Bihārī, in Purnea and Malda, follows the Bihārī custom, and cannot pronounce sh. Taking these two points as the test, we may say that in pronunciation, Bihārī partakes partly of the characteristics of Bengali, and partly of those of the West; with a leaning towards the latter. Finally, in connection with this subject, the old Maithili alphabet is nearly the same as that in use, at the present day, in Bengal.

In the declension of a noun in the various Indo-Aryan vernaculars two processes are involved. There is first the preparation of the base to Declension. receive the appropriate postposition, and there is, secondly, the selection and suffixing of the latter in order to give the required meaning of case. Thus, if we wish to express in Hindi the idea contained in the English words of a horse,' we first take the word $gh\bar{o}r\bar{a}$, meaning 'a horse.' We then prepare this word for the addition of its postposition by changing $gh\bar{o}r\bar{a}$ to $gh\bar{o}r\bar{e}$. So prepared it is called the oblique form of the base. Then to this oblique form we add the genitive postposition $k\bar{a}$, and obtain $gh\bar{o}r\bar{e}$ - $k\bar{a}$, of a horse. In Hindi, the oblique form of the base is frequently the same as the nominative, or, as the latter is called, the direct form of the base, but. whenever it is different, it always, or nearly always, ends in ē. In Bihārī, the oblique form is common in the case of pronouns, and also occurs in the cases of certain nouns ending in l, r, and b. Save in a few exceptional cases, it ends in \bar{a} , not \bar{e} . Examples are ham'r-ā-kē, to me: dekh'b-ā-saû, from seeing; pah'r-ā-mē, in a watch. In Bengali, it is the same, except that the oblique form in the case of nouns is more rare. Examples are ām-ā-kē, to me; dekhib-ā-r, of seeing. So in Hindī, the oblique form of the genitive postposition is $k\bar{e}$, but in Bhojpuri, the only dialect of Bihārī in which it has an oblique form, it is $k\bar{a}$, and this oblique form of the genitive is used to form the nominative plural, a peculiar construction quite unknown to Hindi. Thus hamani-ke, of us, oblique form, $ham^a n\bar{\imath} - k\bar{a}$, used to mean 'we.' So also in Maithili, we have $ham - \bar{a} - r$, of us. of me. and the nominative plural ham rā-sabh, we all. The same construction occurs in Bengali. We have santān-ēr, of a son, and its oblique form, santān-ēr-ā, used as a nominative plural, to mean 'sons.' Again, $\bar{a}m-\bar{a}-r$, of us, of me, and the nominative plural ām-a-rā. We thus see that in the formation of the oblique base of a noun or of a pronoun, Bihārī agrees with Bengali, and not with Eastern Hindī.

In the matter of postpositions, Bihārī takes a middle course. It has the same postposition for the Dative-Accusative, $k\tilde{e}$, as Bengali. For most of the other cases the postpositions, such as $m\tilde{a}$, in, are more closely connected with Eastern Hindī.

As regards adjectives, the distinction of gender is very slightly observed in Bihārī Adjectives. and Bengali, while it is always remembered in the West.

It is, however, in the conjugation of the verb that the most striking affinities with Bengali present themselves. Bihārī has three auxiliary verbs, two of which are found in Bengali and not in Hindī. The Bihārī for 'I am seeing' is dekhait-chhī, and in Bengali, the same phrase is translated dekhitē-chhī. In one dialect of Bihārī, the word for 'I am' is $hāt\tilde{i}$, and in Bengali it may be bati. In Bihārī and Bengali, the sign of the future tense is the letter b. Thus, Bihārī dekh-ab, Bengali dekh-iba, I shall see. In Hindī, it is formed in an altogether different way. So in the same two languages the sign of the Past tense is l. Thus, Bihārī dekh-clanhi, he saw, Bengali, dekh-ilen.

Both in Bihārī and Bengali, the sense of number has almost disappeared in the conjugation of the verb. The old numbers of each tense still remain in existence, but their forms are used to show respect or the reverse, instead of the distinction between plural and singular. In Hindi, there is an important rule regarding the conjugation of the past tense of verbs. In the case of intransitive verbs, the construction is active. We say, 'I went.' In the case of transitive verbs, the construction is passive. We cannot say 'I struck him.' We must say, 'he was struck by me.' In Bihārī and Bengali, this distinction has long since been obliterated, and so far as outward appearance goes, all verbs, both transitive and intransitive, are conjugated actively. For 'I struck,' we have the Bihārī ham maralaha, and the Bengali ami marilam, just as for 'I went,' we have ham geláh², and āmi gelām. There is a further point in this connexion which will not be evident to anyone who only knows literary Bengali. In the Bengali spoken by the uneducated, the conjugation of the past tense of a transitive verb is always distinguished from that of the past tense of an intransitive verb. In both the construction is active, though the forms used are different. A Bengali villager says gelo for 'he went,' but 'mārilē' for 'he struck.' The same distinction is observed in Bihārī, where 'he went' is gēl, and 'he struck' is maralakai. It is hardly necessary to point out that all this is quite different from the idiom of Eastern Hindi.

To sum up,—we observe that, taking grammatical forms as the test, Bihārī occupies a position intermediate between Bengali and Eastern Hindī. In pronunciation, it leans rather to the latter, although there are traces of Bengali influence. In declension, it partly follows Bengali and partly Eastern Hindī, but in the most important point, the preparation of the oblique form of the base, it follows the former and differs altogether from the latter. In conjugation, it differs altogether from Hindī, and closely follows Bengali. For the above reasons, we are compelled to consider that Bihārī and Bengali belong to one and the same group, that is to say, that the former belongs to the Eastern and not to the Mediate Group of Indo-Aryan languages, with which it has hitherto been classed.

Bihārī has three main dialects, Maithilī or Tirahutiā, Magahī, and Bhojpurī. Each of these has several sub-dialects. The three dialects fall naturally into two groups, viz., Maithilī and Magahī on the one hand, and Bhojpurī on the other. The speakers are also separated by ethnic peculiarities, but Magahī and Maithilī, and the speakers of these two dialects, are much more closely connected together than either of the pair is to Bhojpurī. Magahī, indeed, might very easily be classed as a sub-dialect of Maithilī, rather than as a separate dialect. The differences between the two groups of languages will be found fully dealt with under the head of Bhojpurī, on pp. 41 and ff., post. I shall here content myself with noting the most superficial differences between them, which strike the most casual observer.

In the declension of nouns, Bhojpuri has an oblique form of the genitive case, which is wanting in the substantives of the other dialects.

In pronouns, the honorific pronoun of the second person is apane in Maithilī and Magahī, but raüre in Bhojpurī.

The verb substantive in Maithilī is usually chhai or achhi, he is. In Magahī it is usually hai, and in Bhojpurī it is usually bāṭē, bāṛē, or hāwē. The three dialects all agree in forming the present tense definite by adding the verb substantive to the present participle. Thus, Maithilī dekhait-achhi, Magahī dekhait-hai, Bhojpurī dēkhat-bāṭē, he is seeing. But Magahī has also a special form of the present, viz., dēkha-hai, he sees, and so has Bhojpurī, dēkhe-lā, he sees or will see. Finally, the whole system of verbal conjugation is amazingly complex in Maithilī and Magahī, but is as simple and straightforward in Bhojpurī as it is in Bengali or Hindī.

There are other minor differences between the three dialects, but the above are those which are most characteristic and striking. Each dialect will be dealt with separately in the following pages, where the fullest details will be found. Suffice it to say here that Maithilī and Magabī are the dialects of nationalities which have carried conservatism to the excess of uncouthness, while Bhojpurī is the practical language of an energetic race, which is ever ready to accommodate itself to circumstances, and which has made its influence felt all over India. The Bengali and the Bhojpurī are two of the great civilisers of Hindōstān, the former with his pen, and the latter with his cudgel.

This last remark brings us to the consideration of the ethnic differences between the speakers of Maithili and Magahi on the one hand, and those Ethnic differences between speakers of Bhojpuri and of the other Bihari dialects. who speak Bhojpuri on the other. These are great. Mithila. a country with an ancient history, traditions of which it retains to the present day, is a land under the domination of a sept of Brahmans extraordinarily devoted to the mint, anise, and cummin of the law. For centuries it has been a tract too proud to admit other nationalities to intercourse on equal terms, and has passed through conquest after conquest, from the north, from the east, and from the west, without changing its ancestral peculiarities. The story goes that, at the marriage of Rāma-chandra, the Brāhmans of Mithilā showed the same uncivilised pride which is the characteristic of their descendants of the nineteenth century. This Brahmanical domination has left ineffaceable marks upon the nature of the rest of the population. Mithila, or Tirhut, is one of the most congested parts of India. Its inbabitants increase and multiply and impoverish the earth, nor will they seek other means of life than agriculture, or other lands on which to practise the one art with which they are acquainted. Magadha, on the other hand, although it is intimately connected with the early history of Buddhism, was for too long a time a cockpit for contending Musalman armies, and too long subject to the head-quarters of a Musalman Province, to remember its former glories of the Hindu agc. A great part of it is wild, barren, and sparsely cultivated, and over much of the remainder cultivation is only carried on with difficulty by the aid of great irrigation works widely spread over the country, and dating from prehistoric times. Its peasantry, oppressed for centuries, and even now, under British rule, poorer than that of any other neighbouring part of India, is uneducated and unenterprising. There is an expressive word current in Eastern Hindōstān which illustrates the national character. It is 'bhadēs', and it has two meanings. One is 'uncouth, boorish,' and the other is 'an inhabitant of Magadha.' Which meaning is the original, and which the derivative, I do not know: but a whole history is contained in these two syllables.

The Bhojpuri-speaking country is inhabited by a people curiously different from the others who speak Bihārī dialects. They form the fighting nation of Hindostan. An alert and active nationality, with few scruples, and considerable abilities, dearly loving a fight for fighting's sake, they have spread all over Aryan India, each man ready to carve his fortune out of any opportunity which may present itself to him. They furnish a rich mine of recruitment to the Hindostani army, and, on the other hand, they took a prominent part in the mutiny of 1857. As fond as an Irishman is of a stick, the long-boned, stalwart, Bhojpuri, with his staff in hand, is a familiar object striding over fields far from his home. Thousands of them have emigrated to British Colonies and have returned rich men; every year still larger numbers wander over Northern Bengal and seek employment, either honestly, as palki bearers, or otherwise, as dacoits. Every Bengal Zamindar keeps a posse of these men, euphemistically termed 'darwans,' to keep his tenants in order. Calcutta, where they are employed, and feared, by the less heroic natives of Bengal, is full of them. Such are the people who speak Bhojpuri, and it can be understood that their language is a handy article made for current use. and not too much encumbered by grammatical subtilties.

The following are the figures showing the number of people estimated to speak each dialect in the area in which Bihārī is spoken:—

Maithili	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	10,000,000
Magahī	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	$6,\!239,\!967$
Bhojpurī	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	٠	•	•	•	20,000,000
									То	TAL			36,239,967

For reasons which I shall explain when dealing with the Maithili dialect, vide post, pp. 14 and ff., it is impossible to estimate the numbers of speakers of Bihārī in those parts of India which lie outside the Bihārī area. The only exception is that we are able to estimate the number of speakers of Bihārī in Assam, and in the non-Bihārī speaking districts of Bengal. These figures are as follows:—

					Maithilī.	Magahī.	Bhojparī.	Total.
Number of speakers in Assam	•	•		• 1	66,575	33 , 36 5	65,730	165,670
" in non-Bihāri Bengal	•	•	•	•	196,782	231,485	346,878	775,145
		Тот	AL	•1	2 63,357	264,850	412,608	940,815

6 BIHĀRĪ.

The total number of speakers of Bihārī, who are recorded above, is, therefore, 36,239,967+940,815, or altogether 37,180,782,

- No less than five different characters are used in writing Bihārī, viz., the Bengali, the Oṛiyā, the Maithilī, the Dēva-nāgarī, and the Kaithī.

 Written character.

 The Bengali and Oṛiyā characters are only employed in writing a form of Magahī current in Manbhum and the Native State of Mayūrbhanja, respectively. The Maithilī character is used by Brāhmaṇs in writing Maithilī, and will be described when dealing with that dialect. There remain the Dēva-nāgarī and the Kaithī.

The Dēva-nāgarī character is the alphabet used in books written for the educated, and, in writing, by the educated. The following account of it is given here, as this is the first time we meet with it in the Survey. The description will not be repeated with every language which uses it.

Although for the sake of completeness the vowel signs πri , ri, ri are included in the list of characters, they are not used at all in ordinary Hindī. They are, however, required in transcribing Sanskrit grammatical works into the Hindī language.

The forms of the vowels given above are the initials, and are used only at the beginning of a word; when subjoined to a consonant they take the following forms:—

 $a \text{ (not expressed)}, \bar{a} \uparrow; i \uparrow, \bar{i} \uparrow; u, \bar{u}, \bar{i}, \bar{i}; e, \bar{e}, \bar{e}, \bar{a}i, ai, \bar{o}, \bar{o}; \bar{a}u, \bar{h}, au \uparrow$

Thus क ka, खा khā, गि gi, घो ghī, चु chu, छू chhū, जू jṛi, भे jhe, टे ṭċ, है ṭhaĭ, डै ḍai, टो ḍho, तो tō, घो thaŭ, दी dau.

In the following cases the combination of consonant and vowel gives rise to peculiar forms:

 r with u is written τ . τ , \bar{u} , , $\bar{\tau}$.

When one consonant follows another with no vowel between, the two are combined into one compound letter. In most cases the elements of the compound are easily distinguishable, as in varparable solution variety solution <math>varparable solution variety solution va

² The signs y, v, v, v, v, v, and v, v have been introduced by European scholars in late years, and have been adopted by some of the best Benares Paṇḍits. These short vowels do not exist in Sanskrit, to which language the Dēva-nāgarī alphabet was originally confined, but do occur in the Modern Indian languages, and hence additional signs have had to be invented for them.

Consonants are compounded in three ways, viz., 1stly, by writing one above the other, as \mathbf{a} kka, \mathbf{z} tta; 2ndly, by writing one after the other, omitting in all but the last the perpendicular stroke, and uniting the remainder of the character to that next following, as \mathbf{z} bda, \mathbf{z} ttha, \mathbf{z} yya; 3rdly, some letters, when in combination, partially or wholly change their form, thus, \mathbf{z} k + \mathbf{z} sha becomes \mathbf{z} ksha, also written \mathbf{z} ; \mathbf{z} j + \mathbf{z} \mathbf{z} र ra takes two different forms, according as it is the first or last letter of a compound. Thus, when initial in a conjunct, it is written as a semi-circle (called $r\bar{e}ph$) above the second consonant, as in सर्प $sarp^1$; but when non-initial it takes the form of a short stroke below the preceding consonant, as in मुद्दा grahap.

When a conjunct of which τ ra is the first member, consists of more than two consonants, the semi-circle $r\bar{e}ph$ is written over the last letter, as in अभे dharmm, सब्बें sarvv. When a conjunct with τ ra initial is vocalized by f i, f i Conjuncts are classified as strong, weak, or mixed, according to the character of the letters composing them. Conjuncts formed of strong letters only, are termed strong, and those formed of weak letters only, weak conjuncts. Combinations of strong and weak letters are called mixed conjuncts. The following list will be found to comprise all the more common combinations, arranged in three classes.

Anunāsik (चनुनासिक), simply denotes the nasalization of a preceding vowel, and can therefore never begin a syllable. It is written directly over or to the right of the vowel thus nasalized; thus कहाँ $kah\tilde{a}$, क्यों $ky\tilde{o}$. In books edited by foreigners, $Anusw\bar{a}r$ (अनुसार) is commonly, but incorrectly, written instead of $Anun\bar{a}sik$ (अनुनासिक). It is represented in transliteration by the sign \tilde{a} over the nasalized vowel. Thus बाँस $b\tilde{a}s$, \tilde{a} \tilde{b} \tilde{a} \tilde{b} .

² By the strong letters are intended all the five classes of mute letters, both smooth and aspirated; by weak letters, all other consonants.

Anuswār (अनुसार) , which, in strict accuracy, denotes a stronger nasalization than the above, is written, like Anunāsik, over, or to the right of the preceding vowel; as, ग्रंग amś, ग्रंग bamś. In Hindī, however, anuswār is generally used as a short way of writing a nasal when preceding another consonant of its class. Thus, जंका instead of जङ्ग lankā; संच instead of सञ्च sañch; पंडित instead of पण्डित paṇḍit; ग्रंत instead of जन्म ant; खंभा instead of जन्म khambhā.

Visarg (विसर्ग), meaning 'emission of breath' indicates a weak aspiration, which has euphonically taken the place of a sibilant letter or r. It is only found in pure Sanskrit words, and even then, though occurring in the original, is commonly omitted in Hindi. It is written thus, :; e.g., in दु:ख duhkh, usually written and pronounced दुख dukh, = दुस + ख dus + kha; पनाःकरण antah-karan.

Besides these, several other signs are used in Sanskrit, which, as they occasionally appear in Hindi, may here be explained:—

Viram (atta), 'pause' is written under a consonant, thus a k, and denotes the absence of the inherent a by which the consonant is vocalized. It is also called hal.

Avagrah (अवग्रह), 5, indicates the elision of an initial अ a after a final प ē or ओ ō; as, चिग्रीऽधायः trimśō 'dhyāyaḥ, for चिग्री अधायः trimśō adhyāyaḥ. It is, therefore, analogous to the English apostrophe. The half pause, 1, is written at the end of the first line of a couplet of poetry; the full pause, 1, at the end of the second. These marks are only prosodial, and, besides these, there are no other marks of punctuation. In prose they are used as equivalent to the ordinary full stop and the full stop at the end of a paragraph respectively. In most native works, indeed, punctuation is disregarded, and space is not even left between the words. The symbol २ between two words indicates that the former of the two is repeated; as, वह अपने २ घर गए wah ap²nē ap²nē ghar gaē.

The mark o is used, like the period in English, to indicate the abbreviation of a word; as रामायन बा॰ $R\bar{a}m\bar{a}yan$ $B\bar{a}$., for रामायन बालकाण्ड $R\bar{a}m\bar{a}yan$ $B\bar{a}l$ - $k\bar{a}n\dot{q}$.

The characters for the numerals are these:-

The leading feature in Indian arithmetic being the division by four, the signs for fractions are adapted thereto. The rupee is divided into $4 \times 4 = 16$, parts called $\bar{a}n\bar{a}$, which are thus designated (units of all kinds are also thus divided)—

The Kaithī alphabet is, properly speaking, the alphabet used by the Kāyath or Kāyastha caste,—the writing caste of Northern India. While not so complete as the Dēva-nāgarī, for some of the rarer letters are altogether wanting, it bears to that alphabet much the same relation that the English current written hand does to the printed character. It is in general use all over the north of India, from the Gujerat coast to the river Kosi. Throughout this great tract it has of course many variations, some depending upon locality and others upon individual handwriting. Although primarily a cursive written hand, it has been raised to the dignity of type in Bihar and Gujerat. In Bihar, it is used for teaching the lower classes, to whom a knowledge of Dēva-nāgarī is an unnecessary luxury, the elements of a primary education. In Gujerat, it has been elevated to the position of a national character. The introduction of this printed character in Gujerat is a matter within the memory of the present generation. The oldest books published in the Gujarātī language were printed in the Dēva-nāgarī type.

In the following account of the Kaithī character, only the simple letters will be described. The compound letters are rare, and, when met, will be easily recognised. So far as Bihārī is concerned, the Kaithī used changes slightly according to locality, and three varieties are recognised, viz., that of Mithilā, that of Magah, and that used in writing Bhojpurī. These three are shown on the plate opposite.

4 a, being inherent in each consonant, is only written when initial in a word or syllable; thus, we write 44 ap, 34 tua, but 4 pa, 6 ta. The other vowels, when following a consonant, are substituted for the inherent 4 a, and, in this case, they take the following forms:—

મ a (not expressed); માટા ૧૬
૨ i કે દે દે દે : ૩ ઘ ;; ૬ ઘ ૂ;
૨ ē ે; . પે ai ૈ; મો ં ં દે : મો au ે.

Thus, the several vowel sounds, when they follow consonants, are written as follows:—

ન
$$ka$$
, ના $k\bar{a}$, નિ ki , નો $k\bar{i}$, ન ku , ન $k\bar{u}$, ને $k\bar{e}$ નૈ kai , નો $k\bar{o}$, નો kau .

The vowel mark \cdot is called *194411 anuswār as in Dēva-nāgarī. It denotes the nasalization of a preceding vowel, and can therefore never begin a syllable. It is written over, or to the right of the preceding vowel : as, *14 ams, 416 bah. It is used for both the anunāsik and the anuswār of Dēva-nāgarī. The mark: is called bisarg, and indicates a weak aspiration. It is only found in pure Sanskrit words, and even then, though occurring in the original, is commonly omitted in Hindī; as, ξ :44 duhh written and pronounced ξ 44 duhh.

I now proceed to deal with each of the three dialects separately.

MAITHILT OR TIR'HUTIYA.

Gṛihē Sūrā raṇē bhītāḥ, paraspara-virōdhinaḥ, Kulā-'bhimāninō yūyam Mithilāyām bhavishyatha.

Heroes at home, cowards in the battle-field, ever quarrelling amongst yourselves, and inordinately full of family-pride, shall ye be in Mithila.

Rāma-chandra's curse on the Mithilā Brāhmaņas.

Maithilī or Tir hutiyā is, properly speaking, the language of Mithilā, or Tairabhukti (the ancient name of Tirhut). According to the Mithilā-māhātmya, a Sanskrit work of considerable repute in the territory which it describes, Mithila is the country bounded on the north by the Himālaya Mountains, on the south by the Ganges, on the west by the River Gandak and on the east by the River Kosī.1 It thus includes the British Districts of Champaran, Muzaffarpur, and Darbhanga, as well as the strip of the Nepal Tarai which runs between these Districts and the lower ranges of the Himalayas. The Districts of Muzaffarpur and Darbhanga originally formed one District called Tirhut, and that name is still used as a convenient appellation for the country included in these two Districts. At the present day, the language of the greater portion of Champaran is a form of Bhojpuri and not Maithili, but, with that exception, Maithili is spoken over the whole of this tract. It has also extended east of the river Kosī, and occupies the greater part of the District of Purnea, and has moreover crossed the Ganges, and is now spoken over the whole of the south-Gangetic portion of the Bhagalpur District, over the eastern portion of the south-Gangetic portion of the Monghyr District, and in the north and west of the Sonthal Parganas.

Maithilī is spoken in its greatest purity by the Brāhmans of the north of the DarSub-dialects.

bhanga and Bhagalpur Districts and by those of western Purnea. These men have a literature and traditions which have retarded the corruption of the dialect. It is also spoken with some purity, but with more signs of the wearing away of inflexions in the south of the Darbhanga District, and in those portions of the Monghyr and Bhagalpur Districts which lie on the northern bank of the Ganges. This may be called Southern Standard Maithilī. To the east, in Purnea, it becomes more and more infected with Bengali, till, in the east of that District it is superseded by the Siripuriā dialect of that language which is a border form of speech, Bengali in the main, but containing expressions borrowed from Maithilī, and written, not in the Bengali character, but in the Kaithī of Bihar. Siripuriā will be found described on pp. 139 and if. of Vol. v, Pt. I, under the head of Bengali.
The Maithilī spoken in Purnea may be called Eastern Maithilī.

South of the Ganges, Maithilī is influenced more or less by the Magahī spoken to its west, and partly also by Bengali. The result is a well-marked dialect, locally known as $Chhik\bar{a}$ - $chhik\bar{\imath}$ $b\bar{o}l\bar{\imath}$, from its frequent use of the syllable 'chhik,' which is the base on which the conjugation of the Verb Substantive is conjugated.

14 BIHĀRĪ.

The Maithili spoken in the Muzaffarpur District, and in a strip of country on the eastern side of Darbhanga is strongly infected by the neighbouring Bhojpuri spoken in various forms in the adjacent district of Saran and in the greater part of Champaran. So much is this the case, that, as spoken by some people, it is difficult to say where the dialect is Maithili or Bhojpuri. It may be called Western Maithili.

The Musalmans of Mithila do not all speak Maithila. In Muzaffarpur and Champaran, they speak an altogether different dialect, closely allied to the language of Oudh. It is locally known as Shekhai or as Musalmani, and is sometimes called Jolaha Boli, after the caste which forms one of the most numerous Musalman tribes, according to popular opinion, of the locality. The true Jolaha Boli, however, is the language spoken by the Musalmans of Darbhanga, which is a form of Maithila, though somewhat corrupted by the admission of Persian and Arabic words to its vocabulary.

The details of the number of people who speak each form of Maithilī will be given subsequently, in dealing with each of the sub-dialects.

The following are the totals:—

Standard .	,		•	•		•		•		1,946,800
Southern Standa	$^{\mathrm{rd}}$									2,300,000
Eastern		4	•			•				1,302,3001
Ohhikā-chhikī .					•					1,719,781
Western .							•			1,783,495
Jolahā										337,000

These figures do not include the speakers of Maithilī in the Nepal Tarai, concerning whom no figures are available. Under any circumstances, therefore, we shall be justified in assuming that at least ten million people speak Maithilī in the country of which it is the vernacular.

It is impossible to state how many speakers of Maithili live outside the Maithili tract proper, as no figures are available. In the census of 1891, Maithilī and the other Bihar dialects were grouped together with the various languages of Central and Western Hindostan under the one head of 'Hindi.' We cannot now separate the figures. It is possible, in the case of the Provinces of Lower Bengal and Assam, to ascertain from the Census records, the number of people hailing from each District in Bihar, and also the total number of persons who come from all parts of India in which, according to the Census, 'Hindi' is spoken. With the aid of these figures we can, in the case of these two provinces, divide the number of people recorded in the Census as speaking 'Hindi,' proportionately to these two sets of figures, and the results may be expected to represent approximately the number of people in each District of these two Provinces speaking, respectively, the language of each District of Bihar. By totalling up the figures thus gained for the Maithili-speaking Districts, we may expect to obtain the number of people speaking that dialect outside the Maithili-speaking area. Unfortunately, the theory is not borne out by local experience. For instance, a calculation of this kind shows that there should be 6,900 speakers of Maithili in Burdwan, but the local authorities report, in answer to enquiries subsequently made, that as a matter of fact there are no speakers of the language in the District. In such a matter, even the experience of District Officers may be at fault, and though I do not offer the following figures relating to Bengal and Assam as certainly correct, I believe that they have a better foundation than any other assertion which can be made on the point, and give them for what they are worth.

We cannot give similar figures for other Provinces of India, as in their Census Reports, the population figures for people whose home is Bihar are not given district by district. In most of them the number of people coming from the Province of Bihar as a whole is given, and it might be thought that it would be possible to ascertain from this the approximate number of people coming from the Maithilī-speaking tract by dividing that number in the proportion that the whole population of the Maithilī-speaking tract bears to the total population of Bihar; but any such attempt would be misleading. Of the three nationalities which occupy Bihar, the Maithilī, the Magahī, and the Bhojpurī, the first are a timid, home-staying people, who rarely leave their abodes for distant provinces of India, while, on the other hand, the Bhojpurīs are an enterprising tribe found in numbers all over the land, and even in distant countries, like Mauritius and Natal. Any proportional division would not take this important factor into consideration, and, as a result, would show a far greater number of inhabitants of Mithilā in foreign provinces than is really the case.

We must therefore content ourselves with recording the following figures for the Provinces of Bengal and Assam, and leave the question of the number of speakers of Maithili in other provinces of India as an insoluble problem:—

Maithili is the only one of the Bihari dialects which has a literary history. For centuries the Pandits of Mithila have been famous for their Maithill literature. learning, and more than one Sanskrit work of authority has been written by them. One of the few learned women of India whose name has come down to us, was Lakhimā Thakkurāņī, who, according to tradition, lived at the middle of the 15th century A.D. Nor was the field of vernacular literature neglected by them. The earliest vernacular writer of whom we have any record was the celebrated Vidyāpati Thakkura, who graced the court of Mahārāja Siva Simha of Sugāonā, and who flourished about the same time. As a writer of Sanskrit works he was an author of considerable repute, and one of his works, translated into Bengali, is familiar as a text-book, under the name of the Purusha-parīkshā, to every student of that language. But it is upon his dainty songs in the vernacular that his fame chiefly rests. He was the first of the old master-singers whose short religious poems, dealing principally with Rādhā and Krishņa, exercised such an important influence on the religious history of Eastern India. His songs were adopted and enthusiastically recited by the celebrated Hindu reformer Chaitanya who flourished at the beginning of the sixteenth century, and, through him, became the house-poetry of the Lower Provinces. Numbers of imitators sprung up, many of whom wrote in Vidyapati's name, so that it is now difficult to separate the genuine from the imitations, especially as in the great collection of these Vaishnava songs, the Pada-kalpa-taru, which is the accepted authority in Bengal, the former have been altered in the course of generations to suit the Bengali idiom and metre. Up to nearly twenty years ago, the Pada-kalpa-taru was the only record which we had of the poet's works, but, in the year 1882, the present writer was enabled to publish, in his Maithili Chrestomathy, a collection of songs attributed to him, which he collected in Mithila itself, partly from the mouths of itinerant singers and partly from manuscript collections in the possession of local Pandits. That all the songs in this collection are genuine, is not a matter capable of proof, but, there can be little doubt that most of them are so, although the language has been greatly modernised in the course of transition from mouth to mouth during the past five centuries.

Vidyāpati Ṭhakkura or, as he is called in the vernacular, Bidyāpati Ṭhākur, had many imitators in Mithilā itself, of whom we know nothing except the names of the most popular, and a few stray verses. Amongst them may be mentioned Umāpati, Nandīpati, Mōda-narāyaṇa, Rāmāpati, Mahīpati, Jayānanda, Chaturbhuja, Sarasa-rāma, Jayadēva, Kēśava, Bhañjana, Chakrapāṇi, Bhānunātha, and Harshanātha or, in the vernacular, Harakh-nāth. The last two were alive when the present writer was in Darbhanga twenty years ago.

Amongst other writers in Maithilī may be mentioned Man-bodh Jhā, who died about the year 1788 A.D. He composed a Haribans, or Poetical Life of Kṛishṇa, of which ten cantos are still extant, and enjoy great popularity.

The drama has had several authors in Mithila. The local custom has been to write the body of a play in Sanskrit, but the songs in the vernacular. The best-known of these plays are as follows. None of them has been published.

The Pārijāta-harana, and the Rukmini-parinaya, both by Vidyāpati Thakkura.

The Gauri-parinaya by Kavi-lala.

The Ushā-haraṇa by Harshanātha above mentioned.

The Prabhāvati-haraņa by Bhānunātha above mentioned.

Under the enlightened guidance of the late Mahārāja of Darbhanga, there has been a remarkable revival of Maithilī literature during the past few years. At least one author deserving of special note has come to the front, Chandra Jhā, who has shown remarkable literary powers. He has written a Mithilā-bhāshā Rāmāyaṇa, and a translation, with an edition of the original Sanskrit text, of the Purusha-parīksha of Vidyāpati Thakkura, both of which will well repay the student by their perusal.

No translation of any part of the Bible into Maithilī has been issued by the Bible Society, nor is that language included amongst those into which the Serampore Missionaries translated the Scriptures. At the same time, if an article in the Calcutta Review is to be believed, the first translation of any portion of the Bible made into any language of Northern India was that of the Gospels and Acts, made into the Chhikā-chhikī dialect of Maithilī by Father Antonio at the end of the eighteenth century. For further particulars reference may be made to the section on Chhikā-chhikī bōlī, on p. 96 post. The only other translations with which I am acquainted are versions of the Sermon on the Mount, and other short portions of Scripture, made about twenty years ago by Mr. John Christian, and lithographed and published at Monghyr.

AUTHORITIES-

I.—EARLY REFERENCES.—The earliest reference which I can find to Maithili or Tirahutiyā is in the Preface to the Alphabetum Brammhanicum, published in 1771, from which an extract has been quoted in dealing with the Bengali language in Vol. v, Pt. I, p. 23. In the list of languages mentioned on p. viii is 'Tourutiana.'

Colebrooke in his famous Essay on the Sanskrit and Prakrit languages written in the year 1801, is the first to describe Maithilī¹ as a distinct dialect. He points out its affinity with Bengali, discusses the written character used by the Brāhmans, and adds, 'As the dialect of Mithilā has no extensive use, and does not appear to have been at any time cultivated by elegant poets, it is unnecessary to notice it any further in this place.' Since then,² like the other dialects of Bihar, Maithilī remained unnoticed and forgotten, till Mr. Fallon gave a few specimens of it in the Indian Antiquary 'in the year 1875. In the preceding year, it is true, some examples of the dialect were given in Sir George Campbell's Specimens,⁴ but they are there classed as some of many dialects of Hindī spoken in Bihar. Indeed, at this time, it was the general belief that, all over Bihar, the language spoken was a corrupt form of Hindī, whereas, as Colebrooke had long previously pointed out, it was much more nearly allied to Bengali than to the Hindī of the North-Western Provinces. Matters remained in this state, till the present writer published his Maithilī grammar in the year 1880-81.

^{*} The semi-vowel u is not used by Kayasths in writing Maithili, the vowel z being substituted for it.

Written Character. Maithilī character proper is that used by Maithil Brāhmans, and is closely akin to the Bengali. It is not used by persons of the other castes. The character which is used by all the other castes, and which is generally employed, with a few local variations, over the whole of Northern India, from Bihar to Gujerat, is the Kaithī. It is not a complete alphabet, using only the long form of the vowel 'i' for both the short and the long vowels, and the short form of 'u' for similar purpose. A fount of Kaithī type is adopted by the Bengal Government for official publications in the vernacular, intended for publication in Bihar, in which this deficiency has been supplied, and books are now printed in Patna in the same type, so that gradually the written character is becoming more correct in this respect. The Dēva-nāgarī character is used by a few of the educated classes who have come under the literary influence of Benares, and it is understood and read by all persons who pretend to a liberal education.

The table opposite shows the three alphabets current in Mithilā in juxtaposition. Specimens will subsequently be given in all three. In transliterating those in Kaithī, the necessary correction of distinguishing between the long and short 'i' and 'u' will be made.

The pronunciation of the Maithili language is not so broad as that of Bengali, nor so narrow as in the languages of the North-Western Provinces. Pronunciation. This is principally noticeable in the sound given to the vowel \mathbf{x} a, which is neither so broad as the o in hot, nor is so close as that of the a in America, but is something between the two. Another point of resemblance with Bengali is the pronunciation of the compound consonant to hya. In Bengali this is pronounced as if it were $jjh^{y}a$. Thus याद्य grāhya is pronounced grājjh o. In Maithili it is pronounced as if it were zhjya, and grāhya is pronounced grazhjya. In other respects the pronunciation of the consonants is the same as in the country round Benares. Thus the letter & sh, when not compounded with another consonant, is pronounced as if it were with. In the Kaithi character there is even no peculiar character for kh, and that for sh is used instead. Thus the word we shashth, sixth, is pronounced khasht, and in the Kaithi character the word khēt, a field, is written wa shet. The compound at she is pronounced hfp. Thus use pushe, a flower, is pronounced The letters us and u s, are both pronounced like the s in sin. Thus nu sesh, remainder, is pronounced, and usually written, as sekh. The letter n is usually reserved to represent the Persian ش. Thus شيخ, shēkh is written in Nāgarī भेड and in Kaithī શેખ i.e., શ્રોષ.

As in other Bihārī dialects, the vowels e and o, and the diphthongs ai and au have each two sounds, a short and a long one. Accurate writers distinguish these when writing in the Dēva-nāgarī character, but no distinction is made between them in the Maithilī or in the Kaithī characters. In transliterating the following specimens the distinction will always be carefully shown. The following are the signs used in the Deva-nagari character, together with the signs used in transliterating them:—

Dēva	-nāgarī.
Initial.	Non-initial.	Transliteration.
y		e, as in yक्तरा ek rā, तेकरा tek rā.
ए	~	ē, as in एकर ēkar, तेकर tēkar.
খ্ বী	ነ	o, as in श्रोकरा ok rā, होइए hoiai.
भो	f	ő, as in श्रोकर ökar, लोक lök.
ऎ	*	aĭ, as in ऐसनिह aĭsanah', देखैतिश्री dekhaĭtiau.
ऐ	2	ai, as in ऐसन aisan, देखेत dekhait.
স্মী	1	aŭ, as in श्रीतिए aŭtiai, पौलईक paŭlehak.
. श्री	1 .	au, as in श्रीतांह autăh, पौतांह pautăh.

Regarding the pronunciation of these vowels, it will be convenient to consider the long ones first, as they are those which are most familiar to students of Indian languages. The letter \tilde{e} is pronounced like the a in mate; \tilde{o} as the second o in promote; ai as the i in might; and au as the ou in house.

As for the short vowels, each has the short sound of the corresponding long one Thus, e is pronounced as the \acute{e} in the French word $\acute{e}tait$; o is the first o in the word promote, and is well represented by the o of the French word votre, while \bar{o} is represented by the \acute{o} of votre. It has not the sound of the o in hot. The diphthong $\check{a}\check{i}$ has no good representative in English. It is almost the first i in mightily, but is pronounced still shorter; so $\check{a}\check{u}$ may be approximately represented by the ou in householder, when spoken quickly as compared with the ou in house, which is distinctly long.

The vowel a has four distinct sounds, which should be noted. They can be shown in Deva-nagari writing, but not in the two other alphabets of Mithila. They are as follows:—

Déva-	nāgarī.
Initial.	Non-initial.	Transcription.
ચ		a, as in अग्नि agn', fire; मरैकी maraichhi, I am dying.
श्र	s	á as in देखर्बंह dekhabáh, you will see.
आ	τ	ā, as in आगू āgū, before; सारब mārab, I shall beat.
श्रा	†	ă, as in आगुजा ăguā, a preceder; मारेकी măraichhī, I am beating.

Regarding the pronunciation of these vowels, that of a has been already described. It is something between that of the a in America, and that of the o in hot. The letter a is the long sound of this. It is nearly confined to the termination of the second person plural of verbs, and is pronounced like the a in all. It is not usually represented in native writing, but is commonly written as if it was merely a. When it is desired to show it in writing, it is sometimes represented by above the line, and sometimes by; thus the series. This sound, it should be noted, is not nearly so marked in Maithili, as it is in Bhojpuri, in which dialect it is pronounced with a distinct drawl. The letter is the well-known a of father. The letter is the short sound of this. It is something like the a in farrier. In Bengali it is pronounced rather flatter, like the a in hat, but its pronunciation in Bihārī is somewhat broader than this. In native writing it is not customary to indicate it, an ordinary a being usually written in its place. Sometimes, however, a is written for this sound, instead of at ā. Thus we have both align and any for aguā.

In Maithili, the vowels a, i, and u are often so pronounced as to be hardly audible. They are then, in transliteration, written as small letters above the line,—thus, a, i, u. The small a only occurs in the middle of words in unaccented syllables. It is often not pronounced at all by some speakers, but a quick ear will usually distinguish a faint breathing where it occurs like the Hebrew shwa mobile. It is found in most Indian languages. In Hindi, it is usually left unwritten, or, at most, is transliterated by an apostrophe. An example in that language is the word unter which fully transliterated on the usual system would be written $m\bar{a}ran\bar{a}$, but which is commonly transliterated $m\bar{a}rn\bar{a}$ or $m\bar{a}r^*n\bar{a}$. Under the system adopted in this Survey it would be transcribed $m\bar{a}r^*n\bar{a}$. The reason which necessitates this is the requirements of other languages of India, such as Kāshmīrī, in which this imperfect a-sound occurs in positions in which it would be impossible to represent it either by omitting it or by an apostrophe. An example of its use in Maithili occurs in the word a and a above the language of its use in Maithili occurs in the word a and a and a are saw, which is pronounced nearly, but not quite, as if it were a of a and a are saw, which is

The small i and the small occur only at the end of a word. They are, as said above, hardly audible, and sound more like a weak aspirate coloured by the vowel than anything else. Examples of these two imperfect vowels occur in the words that dekholánhi, he saw, and the saw, and the saw, and the saw, are frequently nasalised, as in, the saw dekhiáhi, immediately on seeing, and in the dekholáni, I saw. It should not be supposed that every i or u at the end of a word is pronounced in this imperfect way. Sometimes such a letter is fully pronounced, as in the word unfor pāni, water. Care will be taken to show the correct pronunciation in the transliteration.

As usual in most of the languages of Northern India, the letter a at the end of a word of more than one syllable, is not pronounced. Thus, the word use is pronounced phal, and not phala. This pronunciation will be observed in transliteration, by not writing the final a. Thus, use will be transliterated phal.

The remarks contained in the last three paragraphs refer only to prose. It should be carefully remembered that in poetry all the above-mentioned vowels are fully pronounced. Thus, in Hindī poetry, HICAI is pronounced māranā, not mārnā. Hence, in transliterating poetry, all these small letters will be abandoned, and full sized letters on the line will be written in their places. So, the final a of a word, will be written in such circumstances. Thus, in poetry, the words quoted above as examples will be written dekhalakai, dekhaláhi, dekhiáhu, dekhiáhu, dekhiáhu, dekhaláhu, and phala.

As regards Accent, the general rule is to throw it back as far as possible, but there are exceptions, and in such case the accent will be indicated by a ' on the accented vowel, as in $dekh^al\dot{a}h^{\dot{a}}$ quoted above. The accent cannot be thrown further back than the antepenultimate, and if the penultimate is long the accent falls on it. Thus, $dekhal^akainh^i$, not $dekhal\dot{a}kainh^i$.

Rule of the Short Antepenultimate.

The following rule, known as the Rule of the Short Antepenultimate, is most important. It runs through the whole Bihārī language, and unless it is remembered, numerous difficulties will arise which would at once be cleared away by its application. It should be remembered that it only applies to $Tadbhara^1$ words.

Before coming to the rule itself, it should be noted that, in Tadbhava words, the diphthongs $\hat{\mathbf{U}}$ ai and बी au are always contractions of \mathbf{u} a (or \mathbf{u}) $+\mathbf{v}$ i (or \mathbf{v} ě) and \mathbf{u} a (or \mathbf{u}) $+\mathbf{v}$ u (or \mathbf{u}) o respectively, and may be always, at option, written and pronounced \mathbf{u} \mathbf{v} ai, \mathbf{v} ai, or \mathbf{v} ai, and \mathbf{v} and always be counted as consisting of two syllables.

- a. Whenever the vowel आ ā finds itself in the antepenultimate syllable, i.e., the third from the end of a word, it is shortened to आ ă. Thus, the long form of nāū, a barber, is नाउआ năüā or नीआ nauā; the long form of आगि āgi, fire, is आगिया ăgiyā; and the instrumental case of पानि pāni, water, is पानिए păniē. This आ ă is often written a, so that the above words would be written नउआ naüā, अगिया agiyā, and पनिए paniē, respectively.
- b. Any other long vowel or diphthong finding itself in the antepenultimate syllable is shortened, provided a consonant, which is not a merely euphonic y or w, follows it. Thus, from सीखब sikhab, to learn, सिखलक sikholak, he learned; नेना nēnā, a boy, long form, नेनवा nenowā; but from चूम्रव chūab, to drip, चूम्रवंह chūabáh, you will drip, in which the क ū is followed by a vowel, and from पीम्रव piab, to drink, पीयवंह pīyobáh, you will drink, in which the ई ī is followed by euphonic y.
- c. Any vowel or diphthong, whatever, finding itself removed more than three syllables from the end of a word, is shortened, whether it is followed by a consonant or not. Thus, from देखब dēkhab, to see, देखेतिची dekhaĭtiau, (if) I had seen; from सूतव sūtab, to sleep, स्तितथीन्दि sutitathānh, (if) he had slept.
- d. In counting syllables for the above rules, \hat{v} ai and श्रो au, as already stated, count as two, thus, देखें dekhai, he sees. The imperfect vowels ξ i and ξ u, at the end of a word, are not counted as syllables, nor is the silent ξ a in the same position. Thus,

भाश्रीर āor', not श्रश्रीर aör' and देखब dēkhab, not देखब dekhab; but लोकनि lokani, people, not लोकनि lokani, because the final द i is fully pronounced in this word. On the other hand, the imperfect श्र in the middle of a word is counted. Thus, देखबंइ dekhabāh, not देखबंइ dēkhabāh.

The principal difficulty to the beginner in the study of Maithilī, is the bewilder

ing maze of verbal forms. For each person of each tense sometimes as many as seven or eight different forms may be used. This is due to the fact that the verb agrees not only with its subject, but with its object. Although the distinction of number has disappeared from the modern language, the distinction between superior, or honorific, and inferior, or non-honorific, forms is substituted. In order to simplify the comprehension of the verbal paradigms in the accompanying sketch of Maithilī Grammar, the following general rules are here laid down.

General Rules to be observed in conjugating the Maithili Verb.

Verbs do not change for number, but each person has several forms. There are four principal forms depending, each, upon the honour of the subject and of the object (direct or remote).

The four forms are:-

- 1. Subject non-honorific, Object non-honorific, e.g., he (a slave) sees him a (slave).
- 2. Subject non-honorific, Object honorific, e.g., he (a slave) sees him (a king).
- 3. Subject honorific, Object non-honorific, e.g., he (a king) sees him (a slave).
- 4. Subject honorific, Object honorific, e.g., he (a king) sees him (a king).

The second and fourth forms are usually made by lengthening the final vowel (when necessary), and adding nh^i . Thus $dekh^i lath^i$, he (a king) saw him (a slave); and $dekhal^i thinh^i$, he (a king) saw him (a king). In the third and fourth forms, in which the subject is honorific, the second person is the same as the first. Thus (third form) $dekh^i laih$, I saw, or you saw; (fourth form) $dekh^i laih^i$, I saw, or you saw.

The Rule of Attraction is as follows: If a verbal form ends in ai or ainhⁱ, and the object (direct or remote) is in the second person, the ai is changed to au and the ainhⁱ to aunhⁱ. Thus, Murtā nēnā-kē măral^okai, Murtā beat the child; but, Murtā toharā-kē măral^okau, Murtā beat you. Ok^orā gārī-mã kōn māl chhai, what goods are in this cart? but, toh^orā gārī-mã kōn māl chhau, what is there in your cart (remote object). In the first person, au is often spelt áhⁱ. Thus, măraliau or măraliáhⁱ, I struck you.

The letter k may be added to any form in ai or au without changing the meaning. Thus, $m\ddot{a}ral^akai$ or $m\ddot{a}ral^akaik$: $m\ddot{a}ral^akau$ or $m\ddot{a}ral^akauk$.

Forms ending in ai or aik, or au or auk, always belong either to the first or third forms, and are hence only used when the object is non-honorific.

It is hoped that if these rules are borne in mind, no difficulty will be experienced in grasping the principles of Maithili Grammar, as shown in the following sketch. In this sketch, verbal terminations formed by changing ai to au, or by adding k, are omitted, to save space. These are provided for by the above general rules.

MAITHILĪ SKELETON GRAMMAR.

I.-Nouns.-A noun has three forms. (1) Short, (2) Long, (3) Redundant. Thus-

	Short.		Long.	Rednadant.
A djective s	ghōrā ghar mālī nāŭ mīṭhā mīṭhī (ſem.)	a horse a house a gardener a barber sweet	ghor*wā ghar*wā măliyā nauā miṭh*kā miṭh*kī {miṭh*kī {miṭh	ghorauā gharauā mălīwā nauavā } miṭhák³wā } miṭhákiyā	The short form may be weak or strong. Thus $gh\bar{o}r$ or $gh\bar{o}r\bar{d}$, a horse. Usually only one form is used, but sometimes both.

Number.—Plural is formed by adding a noun of multitude, such as sabh or sabáh, all; lokani, people. Thus, nēnā, a boy; nēnā sabh, nēnā sabáhi, nēnā lokani, boys.

Case.—The only true case is the Instrumental formed by adding \vec{e} , before which a final \vec{a} is elided, becomes i, and \vec{i} or \vec{u} shortened. Thus $n\bar{e}n\bar{e}$, by a boy, $n\bar{e}n\bar{a}$ sabáhi \vec{e} , by boys; phal, a fruit, phal \vec{e} ; $p\bar{a}ni$, water, $p\bar{a}ni\bar{e}$; $n\bar{e}n\bar{i}$, a girl, $neni\bar{e}$; $Ragh\bar{u}$, nom. prop., $Raghu\bar{e}$. To these may be added a rare locative in \bar{e} , h^i , or h^i , as $ghar\bar{e}$, $gharah^i$, or $gharah^i$, in the house. Also a Genitive in ak or k, as in the following,— $n\bar{e}n\bar{a}k$, of a boy; $n\bar{e}n\bar{a}$ sabhak or sabáhik, of boys; phalak, of a fruit; $p\bar{a}nik$, of water; $n\bar{e}n\bar{i}k$, of a girl; $Ragh\bar{u}k$, of $Ragh\bar{u}$.

Other cases are formed by postpositions, added to the form of the Nominative, or to the oblique form when such exists. Some of these are $k\bar{e}$, to; $s\bar{a}$, $sa\tilde{u}$, from or by; $k\bar{e}r$ or kar, of; $m\bar{e}$, $m\bar{a}$, in. Thus, $n\bar{e}n\bar{a}$ $k\bar{e}$, to a boy.

Gender.—Tadbhava nouns and adjectives in \bar{a} , form the feminine in \bar{i} . Thus, $n\bar{e}n\bar{a}$, fem. $n\bar{e}n\bar{i}$. Long forms in " $w\bar{a}$, have fem. in $iy\bar{a}$. Thus, $nen^*w\bar{a}$, $neniy\bar{a}$. Redundant forms in $au\bar{a}$ have $\bar{i}w\bar{a}$ in the fem. Thus, $nenau\bar{a}$, $nen\bar{i}w\bar{a}$. Tadbhava adjectives ending in silent consonant form in . Thus bar, great, fem., bar^i ; $adh^*l\bar{a}h$, bad, fem. $adh^*l\bar{a}h^i$. So also some Tatsana words, e.g., sundar, beautiful; fem.

Oblique form.—Certain nonns, principally ending in b, r and l, have an oblique form in \bar{a} used before postpositions. Thus, pahar, a guard; paherā saŭ, from a guard. These are principally verbal nouns in b and l. Thus $d\bar{e}khab$, to see, $dekh^eb\bar{a}$ saŭ, from seeing; $dekh^eb\bar{a}k$, of seeing: pachhetāol, regretting, pachhetāolā (or pachhetaulā) saŭ, from regretting. So also, the verbal noun in has an oblique form in a or āi. Thus $d\bar{e}kh$, the act of seeing; $d\bar{e}kha$ $k\bar{e}$, or $d\bar{e}kha$ $k\bar{e}$, for seeing, and so on. Irregular are $d\bar{e}b$, giving, obl. $d\bar{e}ma$; $l\bar{e}b$, taking, obl. lāmāš.

MAITHILI SKELETON GRAMMAR.

All the above Genitives have an oblique form in \bar{a} , as follows:—

Direct.	Oblique.
mõr hamar tõhar apan ö-kar hinak ö-kar hunak ja-kar janik ta-kar tanik ka-kar	mōrā hamerā tōrā toherā toherā apanā ekerā hinekā okerā hunekā jakarā janikā takerā kakerā	Each of these oblique genitives can all be used as a kind of secondary oblique base to whice the postpositions can be attached. Thus besides $j\bar{a}h^ik\bar{c}$, to whom, we can have $jak^ar\bar{a}k\bar{c}$, and so on. For the modern forms of the first and second persous, and for the Honorific forms of the other pronouns, these are the only forms used. Thus accusative, $ham^ar\bar{a}k\bar{c}$, $hin^ak\bar{a}k\bar{c}$, and so on. We even have nominative plural like $ham^ar\bar{a}sabh$, toh^arsabh . The non-honorific oblique forms are also used as adjectives, and eh^i and oh^i are only used as adjectives, or as substantival pronouns referring to inanimate things. The secondar oblique bases are never used as adjectives. $K\bar{\imath}$ is never used as an adjective. These oblique form agree with nouns in oblique cases. Thus, hamar ghar, my house; but hamar ghar sa, from my house.

MAGAHĪ OR MĀGADHÍ.

Magaha dēsa hai kaŭchana purī, Dēsa bhalā pai bhākhā burī. Rahalū Maggaha kahalū 'rē', Tekarā·lā kā marabē rē ?

Magah is a land of gold. The country is good, but the language is vile. I lived there and have got into the habit of saying 'rē.' Why, 'rē,' do you beat me for doing so?

Magahī or Māgadhī is, properly speaking, the language of the country of Magadha.

The Sanskrit name of the dialect is hence Māgadhī, and this name is sometimes used by the educated; but the correct modern name is Magahī.

The ancient country of Magadha (now often called Magah) corresponded to what is at the present day, roughly speaking, the District of Patna, The ancient kingdom of Magadha. together with the northern half of the District of Gaya. It contained at different times three famous capital cities. The oldest was Raja-griha, the modern village of Rajgir, situated in the heart of the low range of hills which at the present day separates the District of Patna from that of Gayā. The history of Rāja-griha is enveloped in the mists of legend. Suffice it to say that, according to tradition, its most celebrated king was named Jarā-sandha, who was overlord of a great part of Central Hindostān. In the middle of the sixth century B.C., it was ruled by king Bimbi-sāra, who is famous as the patron of the Buddha. Here that great reformer lived for many years, and the ruined site of the city teems with reminiscences of him. Bimbi-sāra's son and successor founded the city of Patna, which in after years became the capital of Magadha in supersession of Rāja-griha. Here, in the latter half of the third century B.C. were the head-quarters of the great Aśōka, under whom Buddhism was finally adopted as the state religion. The whole of Northern India was directly subject to him, as far south as Orissa, and a great portion of what is now Afghanistan, and of the Deccan as far south of the River Krishna. were under kings who recognised his suzerainty.

Under the Musalmans, the capital of the country was the town of Bihār, in the south of the Patna District, the name of which, a relic of ancient times, is a corruption of the Buddhist word $vih\bar{a}ra$ or monastery. From this town, the whole $s\bar{u}ba$ or Province of Bihār took its name.

During British supremacy, up to the year 1865, the greater part of the present Patna District and the north of the present Gayā District, an area which closely corresponded to that of the ancient Magadha, formed one District known as Zila' Bihār; the south of Gayā, together with a portion of the Hazaribagh District, being known as Zila' Rāmgarh. From that date, the two Districts of Patna and Gayā have been in existence.

Magahī is, however, not confined to the old country of Magadha. It is also spoken all over the rest of Gayā and over the District of Hazaribagh; also, on the West, in a portion of the District of Palamau, and, on the East, in portions of the Districts of Monghyr and Bhagalpur. Over the whole of this area, it is practically one and the same dialect, with hardly any local variations. Only near the city of Patna is it infected with idioms belonging to the North-Western Provinces by the strong Musalmān element which inhabits that town, and which itself speaks more or less correct Urdū.

On its eastern border, Magahī meets Bengali. The two languages do not combine, but the meeting ground is a bilingual one, where they live side by side, each spoken by its own nationality. Each is, however, more or less affected by the other, and the Magahī so affected possesses distinct peculiarities, entitling it to be classed apart as a sub-dialect, which I have named Eastern Magahī. We find this dialect in South-East Hazaribagh, in Manbhum, in the South-East of the District of Ranchi, in the Native State of Kharsāwān, and even so far South as the Native States of Mayūrbhanja and Bamra which belong politically to Orissa and Chhattisgarh, respectively. It is also spoken as an isolated island of speech in the West of the District of Malda.

Pure Magahī has also found its way down South of the District of Ranchi, and appears in the North of the District of Singhbhum, and in the Native States of Sarai Kalā and Kharsāwān, where it is spoken side by side with Oṛiyā. It will be noticed that both Standard Magahī and Eastern Magahī are spoken in Kharsāwān. Here the dividing cause is not difference of locality, but difference of caste. For further particulars concerning Eastern Magahī, and for the various local names by which it is called, the reader is referred to pages 145 and ff.

Magahī is bounded on the North by the various forms of Maithilī spoken in Tirhut across the Ganges. On the West it is bounded by the Bhojpurī spoken in Shahabad and Palamau. On the North-East it is bounded by the Chhikā-chhikī Maithilī of Monghyr, Bhagalpur and the Sonthal Parganas, and on the South-East by the Bengali of Manbhum and East Singhbhum. Standard Magahī is bounded on the South by the Sadān form of Bhojpurī spoken in Ranchi. It then, in the form of Eastern Magahī, runs along the eastern base of the Ranchi plateau through the Bengali-speaking District of Manbhum, and finally curls round to the West, below the south face of the same plateau in the North of the Oriyā-speaking District of Singhbhum, reappearing here as Standard Magahī. It will thus be seen that a belt of Magahī-speaking population bounds the Ranchi plateau on three sides, the North, the East, and the South.

There are three enclaves of Eastern Magahī, one in the Native States of Mayūrbhanja and Bamra, where it is surrounded on all sides by Oṛiyā, and is known as Kuṛumālī, and the other in Western Malda, where it is cailed Khoṇṭāi, and is bounded on the North and West by Maithilī, and on the East and South by Bengali.

The area in which Magahī is spoken is illustrated in the map facing page 1, and the area of Eastern Magahī is shown in greater detail in the map facing page 147.

The following are the figures which show the number of people who speak Magahī in Districts in which it is a ver-

For the reasons stated when dealing with Maithili, vide ante, pp. 14 and ff., it is impossible to ascertain the number of people whose native language is Magahi, but who live in parts of India where Magahi is not the vernacular. All that can be done is to give for the Provinces of Bengal and Assam, the following estimated figures. No figures of any kind are available for other parts of India:—

Character of the language.

Uncouth like the people who use it. In fact the principal difference between it and Maithilī is that the latter has been under the influence of learned Brāhmans for centuries, while the former has been the language of a people who have been dubbed boors since Vedic times.¹ To a native of India, one of its most objectionable features is its habit of winding up every question, even when addressed to a person held in respect, with the word 'rē'. In other parts of India this word is only used in addressing an inferior, or when speaking contemptuously. Hence a man of Magah has the reputation of rudeness, and is liable to earn an undeserved beating on that score, as has been illustrated in the little popular song which is prefixed to this section.

Magahī has no indigenous written literature. There are many popular songs current throughout the area in which the language is spoken, and strolling bards recite various long epic poems which are known more or less over the whole of Northern India. One of these, the Song of Gōpī-chandra, has been published by the present writer, with an English translation, in the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Vol. liv, Part I, 1885, pp. 35 and ff. Another very popular poem, which has not yet been edited, is the Song of Lōrik, of which an account will be found in the eighth volume of the reports of the Archæological Survey of India, and in the present writer's Notes on the District of Gayā.¹

The only other printed specimens of the dialect with which I am acquainted are the fables at the end of the Grammars mentioned below, and a translation of the New Testament. The latter is a version in the 'Magadh' language, and was printed at Serampore in 1826. A revised version of the Gospel of St. Mark was issued by the Calcutta Branch of the Bible Society in the year 1890, and is still on sale.

The character in general use in writing Magahī is Kaithī, for the alphabet of which see the plate facing p. 11. The Dēva-nāgarī alphabet is also occasionally used. For Eastern Magahī, we find the Bengali, and even the Oṛiyā alphabet employed. Examples of the use of all these alphabets will be found in the following specimens.

The pronunciation of Magahī is not so broad as in Maithilī. The letter a is usually pronounced like the a in 'nut,' as in the North-Western Provinces. In the last syllable of the second person of a verb, it is, however, pronounced like the a in 'all.' It will then be transliterated a. Thus a is a is the not compounded with another consonant, both are pronounced a in Maithilī. When not compounded with another consonant, both are pronounced a is sometimes pronounced like the a in 'mad.' It is then transliterated a. Thus a is sometimes pronounced like the a in 'mad.' It is then transliterated a. Thus a is sometimes pronounced like the a in 'mad.' It is then transliterated a. Thus a is maithilī on page 22, which also apply to Magahī. See also the remarks on page 23 regarding the small " in the middle of a word in unaccented syllables. The vowels a is and a is not usually pronounced in Magahī, and not as 'or "as in Maithilī. A final a is not usually pronounced in prose, but is pronounced in poetry. The pronunciation will be followed in the transliteration. Thus we will be transliterated phal in prose, and phala in poetry.

The Rule of the Short Antepenultimate applies in Magahī, exactly as it does in Maithilī. The reader is referred to pages 24 and ff.

As in the case of Maithili, the chief difficulty of Magahi Grammar is the number of verbal forms for each person. The verb, as in Maithili, agrees both with its subject and with its object, and, while there is no distinction of number, there are the four forms of each person depending on the honour of the subject and the object.

As in Maithili, the four forms are as follows:-

- 1. Subject non-honorific, Object non-honorific.
- 2. Subject non-honorific, Object honorific.
- 3. Subject honorific, Object non-honorific.
- 4. Subject honorific, Object honorific.

The second and fourth forms may be distinguished by the fact that they always end in n. The preceding vowel is generally, but not always, i or u, and, though this is not shown in the paradigms, these are often pronounced long. Thus, besides $dekhal^a thin$, he (honorific) saw him (honorific), we may have $dekhal^a thin$.

The Rule of Attraction closely agrees with that which obtains in Maithili. If a verbal form ends in $a\ddot{\imath}$ (or ai) $\bar{\imath}$ or in, and the Object, direct or remote, is in the second person, the $a\ddot{\imath}$ (or ai) is changed to $a\ddot{u}$ (or au), the $\bar{\imath}$ to \bar{u} , and the in to un. This rule also applies when the Subject of the verb is connected indirectly with the second person. Thus, if the subject of a verb is 'his brother', the termination would be $a\ddot{\imath}$ or $\bar{\imath}$, but if it is 'your brother,' the termination would be $a\ddot{u}$ or \bar{u} . The letter \bar{o} is often substituted for $a\ddot{u}$. The following examples illustrate this rule:—

Rām lar kā-kē maral kai, Ram beat the child.

Rām toh rā lar kā kē măral kaü, Ram beat your child.

Okorā gārī-mē kaün māl haï, What goods are there in his cart?

Toharā gārī-mē kaun māl hau, What goods are there in your cart?

Dekhalathin, he has seen His Honour.

Dekhalathun, he has seen Your Honour.

Ōkar bhāī aĭlethī haï, his brother has come.

Tōhar bhāī ailathū haï, your brother has come.

Note that in the last instance, the auxiliary has not changed its form.

The letter k may be added to any form in $a\ddot{\imath}$ (or $a\dot{\imath}$), $a\ddot{u}$ (or au), or \tilde{o} , without changing the meaning. Thus, $m\check{a}ral^aka\ddot{\imath}$ or $m\check{a}ral^aka\ddot{\imath}k$; $m\check{a}ral^aka\ddot{\imath}$ or $m\check{a}ral^aka\ddot{\imath}k$.

Besides the ordinary Present Definite and Imperfect formed as in other Aryan languages by adding the Auxiliary Verb to the Present Participle, Magahī has two tenses, which may be called the Present Indefinite, and the Past Indefinite, respectively. They are formed by adding the Auxiliary Verb to the root, to which the letter a has been appended. Thus $d\bar{e}kha\ h\bar{a}$, I see; $d\bar{e}kha\ hal\tilde{u}$, I saw. These tenses are of very frequent occurrence.

On the whole, Magahī Grammar closely follows that of Maithilī. The two main distinguishing points are, first, the use of the two tenses just mentioned, and, second, the form of the Verb Substantive, which is $h\bar{\imath}$, I am, instead of the very common Maithili $chh\bar{\imath}$.

It should be remembered that the rules of Magahī spelling are in no way fixed, and that forms will often be met which deviate from those now given, but it is hoped that if the above remarks are borne in mind, no difficulty will be experienced in grasping the principles of Magahī Grammar, as shown in the following sketch. In this sketch, verbal terminations formed by changing $a\ddot{\imath}$ to $a\ddot{u}$, $\bar{\imath}$ to \bar{u} , or in to un, or by adding k, are omitted, to save space. They are provided for by the above general rules.

MAGAHĪ SKELETON GRAMMAR.

I.-NOUNS

Each has three forms as in Maithili. Thus (short) ghōrā, (long) ghor wā, (redundant) ghorauwā, a horse

The short for: w may be weak (as ghor), strong (as $gh\bar{o}r\bar{a}$).

Number.—Plural is formed by adding n and shortening a final long vowel. Thus, $ghor\bar{a}$, horse, pl. $gh\bar{o}ran$; ghar, a house, pl. gharan. Plural may also be formed by adding nouns of multitude, such as sab, $l\bar{o}g$. Thus $gh\bar{o}r\bar{a}$ sab, the horses; $r\bar{a}j\bar{a}$ $l\bar{o}g$, the kings.

Case.—The only two cases are the Instrumental and the Locative, formed, as in Maithili by the addition of \bar{e} and \bar{e} respectively, before which a final \bar{a} is elided, and a final \bar{i} or \bar{u} is shortened. Thus, $gh\bar{o}r\bar{e}$, by a horse; $gh\bar{o}r\bar{e}$, in a horse: phal, a fruit; $phal\bar{e}$; $m\bar{a}l\bar{i}$; a gardener; $mali\bar{e}$, $m\bar{a}li\bar{e}$. These forms do not occur in the Plural.

Other cases are formed by postpositions added to the nominative, or (when that exists) to the oblique form (see below). Some of these are $k\bar{e}$, to (also used as a sign of the Accusative); $s\bar{e}$, $s\bar{e}$, $sat\bar{i}$, from or by; $l\bar{a}$, $l\bar{e}l$, $kh\bar{a}t\bar{i}r$, $l\bar{a}g\bar{i}$, for; $m\bar{e}$, $m\bar{e}$, $m\bar{e}$, in; k, ke, $k\bar{e}r$, of. Before the postposition k, a final long vowel is shortened. Thus $gh\bar{o}rak$, of a horse. When the nonn ends in a consonaut, a is inserted. Thus $phal \cdot ak$, of a fruit.

Gender.-Adjectives do not change for gender.

Oblique Form .- In all nones ending in vowels, the oblique form is the same as the Nominative. In all nouns ending in consonants, it may either be the same as the nominative, or may add e. Thus ghar ke or ghare ke, of a house.

Verbal nouns in l have an oblique form in $l\bar{a}$. Thus $d\bar{e}khal$, seeing; oblique form $dekh^{2}l\bar{a}$. Other verbal nouns follow the ordinary rule about nouns ending in consonants.

Note.—In the above, the Oblique forms of the Plural are often used for the Nominative. There are many forms of the oblique plural. The following are those of the pronoun of the first person (the others can be formed from analogy), ham^*ninh , $ham^*ranh\bar{\imath}$, hamaranh. The spelling of these fluctuates. Thus, we find ham^*nin , and so on. From $\bar{\imath}$, we have, inhanh, $inhan\bar{\imath}$, ikh^*nin , $akh^*n\bar{\imath}$, $ekh^*n\bar{\imath}$, $inh^*k\bar{\alpha}$. So also for \bar{u} , $j\bar{e}$, $s\bar{e}$ and $k\bar{e}$. The spelling of all these fluctuates.

Oblique Genitives.—All genitives in kar have an oblique form in $k^a r \bar{a}$. Thus, $\bar{e} \cdot kar$, $ek^a r \bar{a}$; $\bar{o} \cdot kar$, $ok^a r \bar{a}$; $j\bar{e} \cdot kar$, $jck^a \cdot r \bar{a}$ and so on. This can be used as a kind of secondary oblique Case of the pronoun, to which postpositions can be attached. Thus, Dat. sing., $ek^a r \bar{a}$ $k\bar{e}$, and so on.

The Bhojpuri National Anthem.

(Thus paraphrased by Mr. W. S. Meyer, I.C.S.)

Great the virtues of the Stick! Keep a Stick with you alway— Night and day, well or sick.

When a river you must cross, If you'd save your life from loss, Have a stout Stick in your hand, It will guide you safe to land.

When the angry dogs assail,
Sturdy Stick will never fail.
Stick will stretch each yelping hound
On the ground.

If an enemy you see, Stick will your protector be. Sturdy Stick will fall like lead On your foeman's wicked head.

Well doth poet Girdhar say (Keep it carefully in mind) 'Other weapons leave behind, Have a Stick with you alway.'

Bhojpuri, or, if the word were strictly transliterated, Bhojapuri, is properly speaking the language of Bhojpur, the name of a Town and Pargana in the north-west of the District of Shahabad. It is a place of some importance in the modern history of India. The town is the original head-quarters of the Dumraon Raj, and the battle of Buxar was fought at Baghasar a few miles to its west. Politically, it belongs rather to the United Provinces than to Bihār, although it is at the present day included within the boundaries of the latter province. It was from its neighbourhood that the famous Bundelkhand heroes, Alhā and Ūdan, traced their origin, and all its associations and traditions point to the west and not to the east.

The language called after this locality has spread far beyond its limits. It reaches, on the north, across the Ganges, and even beyond the Nepal frontier, up to the lower ranges of the Himalayas, from Champaran to Basti. On the South, it has crossed the Sone, and covers the great

I The word Bhojpuri has obtained currency in English, and it would be an affectation of purism to spell the name 'Bhoj' puri.'

Ranchi plateau of Chota Nagpur, where it ultimately finds itself in contact with the Bengali of Manbhum, and with the Oriyā of Singhbhum.

Of the three Bihārī dialects, Maithilī, Magahī, and Bhojpurī, it is the most western. North of the Ganges, it lies to the west of the Maithilī of The language boundaries. Muzaffarpur, and, south of that river, it lies to the west of the Magahi of Gaya and Hazaribagh. It then takes a south-easterly course, to the south of the Magahi of Hazaribagh, till it has covered the entire Ranchi Plateau, including the greater part of the Districts of Palamau and of Ranchi. Here, it is bounded on the east by the Magahi spoken in the sub-plateau parganas of Ranchi and by the Bengali of Manbhum. On the south it is here bounded by the Oriya of Singhbhum and the Native State of Gangpur. The boundary then turns to the north, through the heart of the Jashpur State, to the western border of Palamau, along which line it marches with the form of Chhattisgarhi spoken in Sargūjā and western Jashpur. After passing along the western side of Palamau, the boundary reaches the southern border of Mirzapur. It follows the southern and western borders of that District up to the river Ganges. Here it turns to the east, along the course of that stream, which it crosses near Benares, so as to take in only a small portion of the north Gangetic portion of Mirzapur. South of Mirzapur, it has still had Chhattisgarhi for its neighbour, but on turning to the north, along the western confines of that District, it has been bounded on the west, first by the Baghēlī of Baghelkhand, and then by Awadhī. Having crossed the Ganges, its boundary line lies nearly due north to Tanda on the Gogra, in the District of Fyzabad. It has run along the western boundary of the Benares District, across Jaunpur, along the west of Azamgarh, and across Fyzabad. At Tāṇḍā, its course turns west along the Gogra and then north up to the lower ranges of the Himalayas, so as to include the District of Basti. Beside the area included in the above language frontier, Bhojpuri is also spoken by the members of the wild tribe of Tharus, who inhabit the Districts of Gonda and Bahraich.

The area covered by Bhojpuri is, in round numbers, some fifty thousand square miles. At home, it is spoken by some 20,000,000 people as Bhojpuri compared with the other Bihari dialects. compared with the 6,235,782 who speak Magahi, and the 10,000,000 who speak Maithili. So far, therefore, as regards the number of its speakers, it is much more important than the other two Bihārī dialects put together. This division of the dialects of Bihārī into two groups, an eastern, consisting of Maithilī and Magahī, and a western, Bhojpurī, commends itself on both linguistic and ethnic grounds. The two eastern dialects are much more closely connected with each other than either is connected with Bhojpuri. In grammatical forms, Maithili and Magahī have much in common that is not shared by Bhojpurī, and, on the other hand, Bhojpuri has peculiarities of declension and conjugation which are unknown to the other two. There is a difference of intonation, too, between the east and the west, which is very marked to anyone who is familiar with Pronunciation compared. the languages of Eastern Hindostan. In Maithili, the vowel a is pronounced with a broad sound approaching the 'o in hot' colour which it possesses in Bengali. Bhojpuri, on the contrary, pronounces the vowel with the clear sharp-cut tone which we hear all over Central Hindostan. Contrasted with this the dialect also possesses a long drawled vowel, which is written in many different ways, but which is always pronounced like the aw in awl. This last sound also occurs both in Maithilī and in Magahī, but not nearly to so great an extent, and moreover, when it does occur in these dialects, it is not so liable to be noticed owing to the broad sound of the frequently occurring vowel a, with which it is, as pronounced in the east, easily confounded. In Bhojpurī, on the contrary, the contrast between this drawled \hat{a} and the clear-cut sound of the common a is so very marked, and the drawled \hat{a} is of such frequent occurrence, that it gives a tone to the whole language which is recognised at once.

In the declension of nouns, the favourite Bhojpuri postposition of the genitive is ke, while in the Eastern dialects it is either k or kar or ker. Declension and conjugation compared. Besides this, the genitive of a Bhojpuri substantive has an oblique form, a thing unknown to Maithili or Magahi. As regards pronouns, Bhojpurī has a word for 'your honour', -viz. raure, -which does not occur in the east. In the conjugation of verbs, the Bhojpuri verb substantive, bāţē, he is, does not appear in the other two, while the form of the verb substantive which may be called common to the three dialects,—hai, he is,—is throughout its conjugation pronounced so differently in Bhojpuri that it can hardly be recognised as the same verb. In the conjugation of the finite verb, Bhojpurī has a present tense,—dēkhī-lā, I see,—which is peculiar to itself, and is not met in the other two dialects. Finally,—Bhojpurī has cast aside all that maze of verbal forms which appals the student when he first attempts to read Maithili or Magahi. All those forms which depend upon the person of or the degree of respect to be shown to the object, which are so characteristic of these two dialects, are absent from Bhojpuri, and instead we have a simple conjugation, with rarely more than one form for each person.

Bhojpurī has three main varieties,—the Standard, the Western, and Nagpuriā. It has also a border sub-dialect called Madhēsī, and a broken form called Thārū. Standard Bhojpurī is spoken mainly in the Districts of Shahabad, Ballia, and Ghazipur (Eastern half), and in the Doab of the Gogra and the Gandak. As its name implies, Western Bhojpurī is spoken in the Western Districts of Fyzabad, Azamgarh, Jaunpur, Benares, the western half of Ghazipur, and South-Gangetic Mirzapur, while Nagpuriā is spoken in Chota Nagpur. Madhēsī is spoken in Champaran, and Thārū Bhojpurī along the Nepal frontier from that district to Bahraich.

Standard Bhojpuri. The most noticeable is the preference of the more southern Districts of Shahabad, Ballia and Ghazipur, and of the southern part of Saran, for the letter r instead of t in the conjugation of the auxiliary verb. Thus, while the Northern Standard Bhojpuri prefers to say ' $b\bar{a}t\bar{e}$ ' for 'he is,' the Southern prefers $b\bar{a}r\bar{e}$. In the centre and north of Saran, there is a peculiar form of the Past tense of the verb, in which u is substituted for the t which is usually typical of Bihārī; but this anomaly does not go further north, and in Eastern Gorakhpur, the language differs but little from that of Shahabad. Still further to the north-west, in Western Gorakhpur and in Basti, there are a few other divergencies from the Standard, but they are not of importance, and are mainly due to the influence of the neighbouring western variety of the dialect. Natives, who are quick to recognise any divergence of dialect, call the language of Eastern Gorakhpur Gorakhpurī, and the language of the west of that district and of Basti, Sarwariā.¹

Western Bhojpurī is frequently called Pūrbī, or the Language of the East, par excellence. This is naturally the name given to it by the inhabitants of Western Hindōstān, but has the disadvantage of being indefinite. It is employed very loosely, and often includes languages which have nothing to do with Bhojpurī, but which are also spoken in Eastern Hindōstān. For instance, the language spoken in the east of the District of Allahabad is called Pūrbī, but the specimens of it which have been sent to me are clearly those of a form of Eastern Hindī. It altogether wants the characteristic features of Bhojpurī,—the present in -lā and the Past in -al,—and instead has the well-known Eastern Hindī Past in -is. I have hence decided to abandon the term Pūrbī altogether, and to use instead the term 'Western Bhojpurī,' which, while not so familiar to Natives, has the advantage of being definite, and of connoting exactly what it is wanted to express.

As compared with Standard Bhojpurī, the following are the principal points of difference in Grammar. In Standard Bhojpurī, the termination of the Genitive is ke, with oblique form ka; in the Western dialect it is ka or kāi, with an oblique form kē. The latter has also an Instrumental Case ending in an which is altogether wanting in the latter has also an Instrumental Case ending in an, which is altogether wanting in the Standard language. In Western Bhojpuri, the adjective is liable to change according to the gender and case of the noun which it qualifies. This is much rarer in the Standard form of the language. The use of the pronouns in the two forms of speech differs considerably. The forms of the demonstrative pronouns vary, and the word $t\widetilde{u}h$ can be used as an honorific pronoun of the second person in the West, which is not the case in the East. In the East the oblique form of nouns and pronouns usually ends in \bar{a} , while in the West, it always ends in \bar{e} . The Verb Substantive has two forms in both sub-dialects, but the hawi, I am, of the East has become haui in the West. As forms of this verb are of frequent occurrence, and as the difference of pronunciation is very marked, the result of this last point is that the 'tone-colour' of each of the two sub-dialects shows considerable diversity from that of the other. In the conjugation of the verb, there are two marked differences. Nothing is more marked in Standard Bhojpuri than the nasal tone which is given to the termination of the first person plural, which, being also used for the singular, is of frequent occurrence. Thus a man of Shahabad says ham kaili for 'I did'. In Western Bhojpuri this nasal is dropped in the plural, and we only have ham kaili. Moreover, in the latter, the first person plural is not nearly so often used for the Singular, as in the Standard. The termination of the third person plural also differs considerably in the two forms of speech. In the Standard it ends in -an or in -ani, and in the West it ends in -ai. The above are only the most noteworthy points of difference between the two main forms of Bhojpuri. There are many other minor ones, for which the reader is referred to the grammatical notes prefixed to the specimens. See, especially, pp. 249 and ff.

The Nagpuriā of Chota Nagpur differs from the Standard type principally in the fact that it has borrowed grammatical forms from the neighbouring Chhattīsgarhī of the east of the Central Provinces.

44 BIHĀRĪ.

Instances are the use of the termination-har, to give definiteness to a noun, and the suffix-man to form the plural. There are other divergencies from the Standard which will be found described on pp. 280 and ff. It may be noted that Nagpuriā is sometimes known by the people who speak it as Sadān or Sadrī and is called by the Muṇḍa tribes of Chota Nagpur 'Dikkū Kājī.'

The Madhēsī of Champaran is the language of the 'Madhya-dēśa,' or 'Middle country,' between the Maithilī of Tirhut and the Bhojpurī of Gorakhpur. As its name implies it is a border form of speech possessing some of the characteristics of each dialect. Its structure is, however, in the main that of Bhojpurī.

The Thārūs who inhabit the Tarai along the Nepal frontier have no speech of their own. Wherever we find them they have adopted more or less completely the language of their Aryan neighbours. Those who are found in the British districts from Bahraich to Champaran speak a corrupt form of Bhojpurī, mixed here and there with aboriginal words which will repay the investigations of the ethnologist. It is worth noting that the Thārūs of Bahraich and Gonda speak Bhojpurī, although the local Aryan language is not that language, but is Eastern Hindī.

The following are the figures which show the number of speakers of Bhojpuri within the area in which it is a vernacular. The totals are given for each sub-dialect. For details, district by district, the reader is referred to the various sections dealing with each sub-dialect :-

Besides the above, there is the population of the Nepal Tarai, which, of necessity, cannot be numbered. A moderate estimate would put the Bhojpuri speakers of that tract at three millions, so that we are justified in estimating the whole number of people who speak Bhojpuri at home, as in round numbers 20,000,000.

For the reasons stated when dealing with Maithili, vide ante pp. 14 and ff., it is impossible to ascertain the number of people whose native language is Bhojpuri, but who live in parts of India where Bhojpuri is not the vernacular. All that can be done is to give for the Provinces of Bengal and Assam the following estimated figures. No figures of any kind are available for the rest of India.

Bhojpurī has hardly any indigenous literature. A few books have been printed in it. Those which I have met will be found mentioned in the list of Texts given under the head of Authorities. So far as I am aware, no portion of the Bible has been translated into the dialect. Numerous songs are current all over the Bhojpurī area, and the national epic of Lōrik, which is also current in the Magahī dialect, is everywhere known.

AUTHORITIES-

A .- EABLY BEFERENCES.

I know of no early references to the Bhojpuri language. Bhojpur, itself, is frequently mentioned by Muhammada: historians, and its wild inhabitants are referred to in no complimentary terms. Nor is the word Pūrbi, so far as I am aware, met with in any early writer, as the name of a language. The following article, taken entire from Yule's 'Hobson Jobson,' illustrates the use of the word from the earliest times as a geographical and ethnical title.

Poorub, and Poorbeea, ss. Hind. $P\bar{u}rab$, $P\bar{u}rb$, 'the East,' from Skt. $p\bar{u}rva$ or $p\bar{u}rba$, 'in front of,' as $pa\acute{s}cha$ (Hind. pachham) means 'behind' or 'westerly' and dakshina, 'right-hand' or 'southerly.' In Upper India the term usually means Oudh, the Benares division, and Behar. Hence Poorbeea $(p\bar{u}rbiy\bar{a})$, a man of those countries, was, in the days of the old Bengal army, often used for a sepoy, the majority being recruited in those provinces.

1553. "Omaum (Humayun) Patxiah......resolved to follow Xerchan (Sher Khan) and try his fortune against him..... and they met close to the river Ganges defore it unites with the river Jamona, where on the West bank of the river there is a city called Canose, one of the Chief of the kingdom of Dely. The character in general use in writing Bhojpuri is the Kaithi, for the alphabet of which, see the plate facing p. 11. The Déva-nagari is also used by the educated classes. Examples of both these alphabets will be found in the following specimens.

There is a marked difference between the pronunciation of Bhojpurī and that of the two eastern dialects of Bihārī. The sound of the latter, especially of Maithilī, more nearly approaches that of Bengali, owing to the frequent occurrence of the letter a which is pronounced rather broadly. In Bhojpurī, on the contrary, the letter a is usually pronounced in the clear-cut way which we find elsewhere in the North-Western Provinces, i.e., like the u in nut.

The long, drawled a which I transliterate d, is especially common in Bhojpuri, and its contrast with the short clear-cut a, which is of frequent occurrence, gives a striking piquancy to the general tone-colour of the dialect. Usually, this drawled d is left unrepresented in writing but its existence is fully recognised, and various attempts are made by different people to portray it. Thus, some write the sign over the consonant containing this vowel. Others write after it. Others write: after it, and others repeat the letter a after it. For instance, the word $d\bar{e}khd$ -ld, you see, is written by some d others d o

The short vowel, which I transliterate \check{a} , which is pronounced like the a in mad, and which is common in Maithilī and Magahī, does not occur in Bhojpurī. The clear-cut a pronounced like the u in nut is always substituted.

The Rule of the Short Antepenultimate occurs in Bhojpuri as in the other Bihāri dialects. The only difference is that a long \bar{a} is shortened to a and not to \bar{a} . Thus, the third person Past of $m\bar{a}ral$, to strike, is mar^alas , he beat, not $m\bar{a}r^alas$. For further particulars regarding the shortening of the Antepenultimate, a fact which is continually observed in Bhojpuri, see pp. 24 and ff.

As customary, when the letter a in the middle of a word is silent, or is only very lightly heard, it is represented by a small above the line. As elsewhere, this is not done in poetry, in which every a, even the a at the end of a word is fully pronounced.

Bhojpuri Grammar is much more simple than that of Maithili or Magahi. Except in a few isolated instances, the form of the verb depends only on the subject. The Object has no effect upon it. In Standard Bhojpuri, the first person singular is very rarely used, the plural being used instead, but this is not the case in the Western sub-dialect.

Bhojpurī has a peculiar form of the Present Indicative, which closely corresponds to the Naipālī Future, and which is, itself, often used in the sense of the Future. It is formed by adding the suffix $-l\bar{a}$ to the Present Subjunctive. According to Dr. Hoernle, this suffix means 'gone,' and is used like the $-g\bar{a}$ of the Hindōstānī Future. Just as the Hindōstānī $d\bar{e}kh\tilde{u}-g\bar{a}$, mean literally 'I am gone that I may see,' hence 'I am going to see,' hence 'I shall see,' so do the Naipālī $d\bar{e}kh\tilde{u}-l\bar{a}$, and the Bhojpurī $d\bar{e}kh\bar{i}-l\bar{a}$. In the last named instance the tense has come to be more often used as a present.

Bhojpurī has its own Verb Substantive. Just as $chh\bar{\imath}$, I am, is typical of Maithilī, and $h\bar{\imath}$, I am, is typical of Magahī, so $b\bar{a}t\bar{\imath}$, $b\bar{a}r\bar{\imath}$, or $b\bar{a}n\bar{\imath}$, is typical of Bhojpurī.

It is hoped that, if the above remarks are borne in mind, no difficulty will be experienced in grasping the principles of Bhojpuri grammar, as shown in the following sketch:—

BHOJPURĪ SKELETON GRAMMAR.

I-NOUNS-

Each has three forms as in Maithili. Thus (short) $gh\bar{o}r\bar{a}$, (long) $ghor^aw\bar{a}$, (redundant) $ghorau\bar{a}$. The long form sometimes ends in \bar{e} instead of \bar{a} . Thus, $ghor^aw\bar{e}$. All these forms may have their termination nasalised. Thus $ghor^aw\bar{a}$. The short form may be weak (as $gh\bar{o}r$) or strong (as ghōṛā).

Number.—Plural is formed by adding ni, nh, or n, and shortening a preceding long vowel. Thus ghōrā, horse, ghorani, ghōranh, or ghōran, horses; ghar, a house, pl. gharani, gharanh or gharan. Plural may also be formed by adding nouns of multitude, such as sabh, all, lōg, people. Thus ghōrā sabh; rājā lōg.

Case.—The only true cases are the Instrumental and Locative Singular, formed, as in Maithili, by the addition of \bar{e} and \bar{e} respectively, before which a final \bar{a} is elided, and a final \bar{i} or \bar{u} is shortened. Thus, $gh\bar{o}_{\bar{i}}\bar{e}$, by a horse; $gh\bar{o}_{\bar{i}}\bar{e}$, on a horse: phal, a fruit, $phal\bar{e}$: $m\bar{a}l\bar{i}$, a gardener; $mali\bar{e}$, $mali\bar{e}$. These forms do not occur in the plural.

Other cases are formed by postpositions added to the nominative, or (when such exists) to the oblique form; see below. Some of these are letter cases are formed by postpositions added to the nominative, or (when such exists) to the oblique form; see below. Before the postposition k, a final long vowel is shortened, as in $gh\bar{o}_{\bar{i}}ak$, of a horse; when the noun ends in a consonant, a is inserted, as in $gh\bar{o}_{\bar{i}}ak$, of a house. There is an oblique genitive postposition $k\bar{a}$. Thus $r\bar{a}j\bar{a}\cdot k\bar{e}$ mandir, the king's palace; but $r\bar{a}j\bar{a}\cdot k\bar{a}$ mandir $m\bar{e}$, in the king's palace. The distinction is seldom observed by the uneducated.

Gender.-In Standard Bhojpuri, adjectives do not change for gender.

Oblique Form.—Verbal nouns in al have an oblique form in $l\bar{a}$. Thus $d\bar{e}khal$, seeing; $dekh^e l\bar{a}$ - $m\bar{e}$, in seeing. Verbal nouns in the form of the root have an oblique form in e. Thus, $d\bar{e}kh$, seeing; $dekhe l\bar{a}$, for seeing. In all other nouns, the oblique form is the same as the

An optional form of the oblique singular of \bar{u} , is $w\bar{a}hi$; of $j\bar{e}$, $j\bar{a}hi$; of $t\bar{e}$, $t\bar{a}hi$; of $k\bar{e}$, $k\bar{a}hi$. For teh, we can substitute tehi or $t\bar{e}$; for oh, ohi or \bar{o} , and so on for the others.

There are many forms of the oblique plural in all the above. The following are those of i. The others can be formed by analogy. Ek^*ni inhan, inhan, inhan, inhan, inhan, etc.; jek^*ni , etc. The spelling of all these fluctuates.

The genitives in r and re have a feminine form in ī, which is met in poetry. Thus morī, ham rī, and so on.

All these genitives have an oblique form in \bar{a} , viz. $m\bar{o}r\bar{a}$, $kam^ar\bar{a}$, $t\bar{o}r\bar{a}$, $tok^ar\bar{a}$; so also $ek^ar\bar{a}$, $ok^ar\bar{a}$, $jek^ar\bar{a}$, $tek^ar\bar{a}$ and $kek^ar\bar{a}$. These can be used as fresh oblique bases of the Pronoun. Thus $m\bar{o}r\bar{a}$ -s \bar{e} , from me; $ek^ar\bar{a}$ -s \bar{e} , from this, and so on. In the plural they become kam^aran , tok^aran , ek^aran , etc.; thus kam^aran -s \bar{e} , from us.

III.-VERBS-

General Note.—In all Verbs, the first person singular is hardly ever used except in poetry. The plural is used instead. The use of the second person singular is vulgar. The plural is here also used instead. The first person plural is commonly used instead of the second person when it is desired to show respect. The syllable $s\hat{a}$ may be added to the second or third person to show the plural number or respect. Thus $d\bar{e}kh\hat{a}\cdot l\hat{a}\cdot s\hat{a}$, your honour sees.

It is quite common to use Masculine forms instead of the Feminine.

or dekhiti, and so throughout.

The Imperative is the same as the Simple Present. Precative Forms are, singular, dekhihē, dēkhū, dekhbē; Plura dekhihā, dekhihau, dēkhī, dekhbā.

Present Definite. I am seeing, dēkhat bānī, and so cn. Contracted form dekh tānī, or dekh tārī and so on. The participle does not change for gender or number.

Imperfect, I was seeing, dekhat rah li, or dekhat rah and so on. The participle does not change for gender or number.

Perfect, I have seen, formed by adding ha or ha to the Past. ha is used in the first and third persons plural, and ha in the second person, and in the third person singular. Thus dekh*! ha, I have seen: dekh*! ha, you have seen. Ha may be substituted for ha and ha for ha.

Another form of the Perfect is made by conjugating the locative of the Past Participle, with the Present tense of the auxiliary ver 5. Thus, $dekh^*l\bar{e}\ b\bar{a}n\tilde{i}$, I have seen, $dekh^*l\bar{e}\ b\bar{a}r\hat{a}$, you have seen, and so on.

Pluperfect, I had seen, $dekh^e l\bar{e} \ rah^e l\bar{i}$ or $rah\bar{i}$ and so on. The syllable $h\hat{a}$ may be added. Thus, $dekh^e l\bar{e} \ rah^e l\bar{i}$ $h\hat{a}$. In the second person, and in the third person singular, $h\hat{a}$ is used instead of $h\bar{a}$.

C .- Neuter Verbs-

In the third person singular masculine of the past, they may take the form of the Past Participle, without any suffix. Thus beside gir 1/3 and gir 1/as, we may have also giral (fem. gir 1/i), meaning, 'he fell.'

In the second form of the Perfect, the nominative, and not the locative of the Past Participle is used. Thus, $giral\ b\bar{a}n\tilde{i}$, not $gir^*l\bar{s}$ $b\bar{a}n\tilde{i}$, I have fallen. In the Pluperfect, the form is the same as in the Active Verb. Thus, $gir^*l\bar{e}\ rah^*l\tilde{i}$ or $rah\tilde{i}$, I had fallen.

A neuter verb, such as $agh\bar{a}$, be satiated, would make its 3rd sg. past optionally $agh\bar{a}il$. The verb $\bar{a}w$, come, is treated as a verb in $\bar{a}w$ in the Present Indicative $(\bar{a}we\cdot l\bar{a})$, he comes, and the Preterite Conditional $(aut\tilde{i}, (if))$ I had come). In the other tenses, it is treated as a verb in a. Thus $ail\tilde{i}, 1$ came; $\bar{a}il$, he came.

- F.—Causal Voice, formed by adding āw to root. Thus dekhāwī-lā, I cause to see. The double causal adds "wāw.
- G.—Potential Passive Voice, formed by adding a to the root. Thus dehhaī-la, I can be seen.

MAITHILĪ OR TIRHUTIYĀ.

The standard dialect is the language which is specially called Tir hutiyā by people in other parts of India. It is called Maithilī by its speakers. Its head-quarters are the North and Centre of the Darbhanga District, where the Maithil Brāhmans muster in large numbers. In the South of Darbhanga it is spoken in the slightly corrupt form which I call Southern Standard Maithilī. It is spoken in its greatest purity by Maithil Brāhmans, and the other higher castes of its habitat. The lower castes have a habit of clipping their final syllables which will be abundantly shown in the specimens. The same peculiarity is observable in the Southern variety of the Standard Language.

Standard Maithilī is also spoken in that portion of the District of Monghyr (except in the southern portion of Gogri Thana), which lies north of the Ganges. As its geographical position would suggest, it is the Southern variety which is spoken here. The District of Bhagalpur is similarly divided into two portions, a northern and a southern by the Ganges. North Bhagalpur is a long narrow strip of country which runs from the Ganges right up to the Nepal frontier, and includes two sub-divisions, viz., Supaul on the north, and Madhipura, south of Supaul, on the banks of the Ganges. Standard Maithilī is spoken over the whole of North Bhagalpur, the pure variety being spoken in Supaul, and the southern in Madhipura.

In the District of Purnea, which lies to the east of North Bhagalpur, the bulk of the population speak Eastern Maithilī, but the Brāhmans of that District, especially those living to the west on the Supaul border, speak pure Standard Maithilī.

The following is the estimated population speaking both varieties of Standard Maithili:—

	Number of Speakers
Darbhanga	•		•	•	•	•	•		2,460,000
Monghyr		•	•	•	•	•	•		800,000
Bhagalpur	•		•				•	•	956,800
Purnea	•		•	•	•	•	•		30,000
						То	TAL	•	4,246,800

With reference to the above, it may be mentioned that the Magistrate of Monghyr has returned 1,000,000 people as speaking Maithilī in his District. On further inquiry it appears that it may be estimated that, of these, 800,000 speak Standard Maithilī, and the remaining 200,000 the Chhikā-chhikī Bōlī of the South of the Ganges. All the above figures are estimates made by the local officers, as the Census figures do not distinguish between Maithilī and the Hindī dialects of the North-Western Provinces.

No attempt has been made by the local officials to distinguish the populations speaking the true Standard Maithilī and its Southern variety. The matter is not of great importance, but the following estimates, based on my own experience, will not, I think, be found to be very incorrect:—

The following specimen is in the pure Maithili dialect used by the Tirhutia Brāhmans and other higher class people of the Darbhanga District, their head-quarters. It is written in the character which they use themselves,—the Maithili, par excellence. This character is only used by these Brāhmans, and accordingly I have also given the same specimen in the variety of the Kaithi character which is used in that District. Both specimens are in facsimile. Writers in this part of the country are very careless, and hence, there are minor differences, principally owing to slips of the pen, between the two copies. These are not sufficient to render separate transliterations necessary, and so I have given only one transliteration, following, as a rule, the copy in the Maithili character, and silently correcting any mistakes as they occur. It should be remembered that the Maithili character is used only by Brāhmans, and that other higher class people use the Kaithi character:—

The next specimen is a letter in Standard Maithili, which formed part of the record of a case tried by me in the Darbhanga District some twenty years ago. It was originally written in the Kaithi character, but is here given in the Dēva-nāgari. It is in other respects given exactly as it was written, only names of persons and places being, for obvious reasons, changed.

TRANSLATION OF A LETTER WRITTEN BY DURMIL JHĀ TO MUSAMMAT CHAMPĀBATĪ.

After compliments,—May you live for a long time. My good wishes to Champābatī. Moreover, I have learnt both from the mouth of Lakshman and from your letter that you are all well, and my heart has been pleased thereby. Lakshmī Dēbī has had a little child, and we must make arrangements for its support; she has no mother, and I hope that you will keep an eye on her, and see that she gets everything necessary (lit. oil and pots). I have sent you a box herewith; it is for you, keep it. In the box there are six rupees, and some Kābulī * fruits; open the box and give two rupees and half the fruit to Lakshmī Dāī, but give it privately. You will keep two rupees, the remainder of the fruit, and the box; I have sent them for you. Don't be unhappy about anything: all your property, which has been spoilt, will be recovered for you; and then only will I be easy in my mind.

My compliments to the father-in-law. Moreover, it is a long time since you have pressed Bholā Sāhu to pay the money he owes. You know what sort of temper my son has, so realize the money quickly, or you will repent afterwards. He has sold all the paddy in the granary. When will the fool get decent wisdom?

My good wishes to Göbind Bābū.

For Lakshmi Dāi		•			•		. 2	2	2
For the little girl	•	•	•	•		•	. 2	2	2

^{*} The word masala usually means spices. I am, however, assured that here it must be translated as above.

The next specimen is a short poem by the famous old Master-singer, Vidyāpati Thākur, who flourished at the end of the 15th century. He was court poet to Rājā Šiva-simha of Sugāonā, a village still existing in the Darbhanga District. There is a tradition that this king was summoned by the Emperor to Delhi for some offence, and that Vidyāpati obtained his patron's release by an exhibition of clairvoyance. The Emperor locked him up in a wooden box and sent a number of the courtesans of the town to bathe in the river. When all was over he released him, and asked him to describe what had occurred. Vidyāpati immediately recited impromptu the poem which I now give as a specimen of his powers, describing a beautiful girl at her bath. Astonished at his power, the Emperor granted his petition to release King Śiva-simha.

The poem has been handed down by word of mouth for centuries, and the language is, no doubt, modernised; but there is little doubt that, whatever we may think of the legend, the ideas are those of the poet himself.

As customary, the poet inserts in the last verse his own name.

In poetry, all vowels, even a silent a at the end of a word, and those represented in prose by small letters above the line in the middle or at the end of a word, are fully pronounced.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

- 1. The pretty one is bathing, and as I gaze, the five-arrowed (God of Love) seizes my heart.
- 2. Her locks melt in a cascade of water-drops, as though darkness were weeping in fear of the brightness of her moon-face.
- 3. Her garments, wet (and transparent), cling to her form, and so fair is the vision that (Cupid), the soul-disturber, awakes even in the hearts of hermits.
- 4. Her two fair bosoms are a pair of sweet $chak\bar{e}w\bar{a}s$, as though God had brought and united each to its mate.
- 5. Therefore, for fear that they will fly away to the clouds in the sky, bind them and hold them fast in the snare of thine arms.
- 6. Singeth Vidyāpati, the Sun among the Poets, 'a wise man never proves himself a fool.'2

The above is the straightforward meaning of the above lines. But, as is customary in Indian poetry, it is so arranged that altogether different senses can be obtained by dividing the words differently. Thus, if we divide the first line as follows, and slightly alter the spelling, we get,— Kā Maina kara e sinānē, hera ite hridaya Hara Pacha-bānē.

Which means, 'O Maina, God of Love, why art thou beckoning? See here, on her heart is seated Hara (i.e., her bosom), (thine enemy,) O thou who hast five arrows.'

So the second line may be divided,-

Chikura galae jala-dhārā, mukha-sasi dara jani ro, ae adhārā.

Which means, 'Weep not (jani ro), O darkness, in fear of her moon-face, for her locks are clouds, which will soon overshadow (its brightness).

Again, the third verse,-

Tita lava sanatana lāgū, muni-hū-ka mānasa Mana-matha jāgū.

Which means, 'There (on her bosom, or Hara,') the pious have fixed their devotion, for thou, O Cupid, hast awoken even in the hearts of hermits.

The next specimen is a short extract from the Hari-bans, a poetical life of Kṛishṇa, written by Man-bodh Jhā in the latter half of the eighteenth century.

^{1.} The Brahminy duck, a snow-white bird. Under ordinary circumstances, they are cursed never to pass the night together.

² I.e., verb. sap. sat.

³ In the first verse, her bosom was compared to the God Hara, who was the destroyer of the Indian Cupid. Hence, when the latter attacks the saints, they fix their minds on the former in self-protection. But, also for their good intentions, Hara, himself, has taken the form of her bosom.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

When some time had passed, (the babe) Hari soon began to be able to use his hands and feet.

What place was there, where he did not go? How often did he go outside even the court-yard of the house?

Gleefully used Madam Jasodā to laugh, as she ever and again caught him up, and brought him back from the outer doorway.

Sharp as a little needle would he strut about, till he became the worry of her life.

How often did she snatch burning coals out of his very hand! and how often did he burn (his fingers) when she was not looking!

The next specimen is a short poem written in the middle of the last century by Bhānu-nāth Jhā. It describes the pangs suffered by a Herdmaiden who has been deserted by Krishna. According to custom, the poet enters his own name, and that of his patron, the father of the present Mahārāja of Darbhanga in the last verse.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

O Kṛishṇa, learn and understand. Distraught is the lady by the fresh severance. Even a bed of lotuses pleases her not. On his (i.e., thy) path gazing does she pass the day.

Some are anointing her body with cooling sandal-paste, while others stand by and say she cannot live.

To what can she have recourse? Even the cool rays of the moon continually burn her.

She is, as it were, performing austerities with but one fixed desire, and night and day she prays, murmuring but his name in her prayers.

Saith the Poet Bhanu-nath, The wise Mahesvara Simha understands the sentiment.

The next specimen is a translation of the Parable of the Prodigal Son into the form of Maithili which is used by the lower caste Hindus of the Darbhanga District. It will be noticed that the principal differences are that in the first place the vocabulary is not so sanskritised, and, in the second place, that the forms of the verb which end in nh, and which denote that respect is shown to the object are not used.

SOUTHERN STANDARD MAITHILĪ.

Between the District of Darbhanga, and those Districts of Bengal proper in which the Bengali language is spoken, lie the northern portions of the Districts of Monghyr and Bhagalpur, and the entire Districts of Purnea and Malda, all of which lie north, or, in the case of Malda, north-east of the River Ganges. Purnea and Malda may be left out of consideration for the present. Northern Bhagalpur consists of two subdivisions, Supaul and Madhipura. The former is the northern of the two, and is bounded on the west by the Darbhanga District and on the east by the low country which contains the shifting bed of the River Kusi, and which separates it from the District of Purnea. The language and people of Supaul are the same as that of Northern and Central Darbhanga, and the specimens previously given for that area, will also do for the dialect spoken in it. Going from west to east in order, the Samastipur subdivision of Darbhanga, North Monghyr, and the Madhipura subdivision of Bhagalpur form a belt of land on the northern bank of the Ganges, in which also Maithili is spoken, but not quite so purely as in the true Standard Maithili tract of Central and North Darbhanga. A grammar of the form of the dialect here spoken will be found in part V of the Seven Grammars of the Dialects and Sub-dialects of the Bihari Language, written by the present author. The following are the chief points of difference between it and Standard Maithilī:---

A. PRONUNCIATION-

The principal difference is that the rule of shortening the antepenultimate vowel is not followed in the case of the Simple Present of a verb. Thus, 'he sees,' is $d\bar{e}khai$, not dekhai as in Standard Maithilī.

B. NOUNS-

Another termination of the Genitive is ke. Before the Genitive termination k, a final long vowel is shortened. Thus, from $n\bar{e}n\bar{a}$, a boy, one form of the Genitive is $n\bar{e}nak$, not $n\bar{e}n\bar{a}k$, as in Standard Maithili. The Locative in \bar{e} , which is rare in Standard Maithili, is much more common in this southern form of the dialect.

C. PRONOUNS-

The Genitives of the Personal Pronouns are as follows,— $m\bar{o}r$, $m\bar{o}re$, or $m\bar{o}ra$; hamar, ham^are , or ham^ara ; $t\bar{o}r$, $t\bar{o}re$, or $t\bar{o}har$, toh^are , or toh^ara . The Honorific pronoun of the second person is $\bar{a}is$, $ah\bar{a}$, or ap^ane . The Genitives of $j\bar{e}$, who; $s\bar{e}$, he; and $k\bar{\imath}$, who?; are $j\bar{e}\cdot kar$, $t\bar{e}\cdot kar$, and $k\bar{e}\cdot kar$, respectively. The corresponding oblique forms are $jek^ar\bar{a}$, $tek^ar\bar{a}$, and $kek^ar\bar{a}$. The oblique form of $k\bar{\imath}$, what?, is $kath\bar{\imath}$, $keth\bar{\imath}$, $k\bar{a}he$, kah^i , or $kiy\bar{e}$.

D. VERBS—

The following are the terminations used in the Simple Present, and in the Past, Indicative and Conditional. The four Forms have the same power as in Standard Maithili:—

Person.	Form I.	Form II.	Form III.	Form IV.
1 2	$\widetilde{a}, \widetilde{o}, \text{ or } a\widetilde{u}$ \widehat{e} (Fem. \widetilde{i}), \widetilde{e} , ai , $a\widetilde{i}$, $h\widetilde{i}$, or $h\widetilde{i}k$.	Same as Form IV .		iainh. hunh.
3	ai or aik		ath, athi, ā (Fem. ī), or anh (Fem. inh.)	thinh, hinh.

The Past tense Indicative of transitive verbs has the following terminations in the third person:—

Forms I and II.—ak, kaik. Form III.— $k\bar{a}$, \tilde{e} , anh, $\bar{a}t$. Fem. $k\bar{\imath}$, inh, $\bar{\imath}t$. Form IV.—hinh, khinh.

In the case of intransitive verbs, the second person has the following terminations:—

Form I.—ā, haî, hā.

In the third person, Form I either drops all terminations, or else take one of the following,— \bar{e} , ai, and, in North Monghyr, a. The terminations of Forms III and IV are those given above in the table, with, in addition, \bar{e} , $\bar{a}t$; fem. $\bar{i}t$.

In addition to the above, the following terminations may be used in the Past tense of any verb, whether transitive or intransitive:—

Form 1.—1st person, \tilde{a} (only in North Monghyr); 3rd person, kai.

Form III.—1st person, ianh, ihanh; 2nd person, hå.

The following are the terminations of the Future:-

Person.	Form I.	Form III.	Forms II and IV.
	$b\widetilde{\widetilde{\sigma}},bai,baik$	l .	bainh.
2	bē, bē, bai, bai, bhē, bhai, bhī, bhik	bâh, bâ, bhau, bhauk	bhunh.
3	bē, bē, bai, bai, bhē, bhai, bhī, bhīk at, tai, taik; (Fem.) aitī	tanh (Fem. tinh), tā (Fem. tī), tāt (Fem. tīt), tathi.	thinh, thanī.

As in Standard Maithili, the object influences the form of the verb which should be used. The following rules illustrate this:—

Forms I and II are used when the subject is non-honorific. Forms III and IV when it is honorific.

Forms II and IV are used when the object, direct or remote, is mentioned with respect.

When the object, direct or remote, is in the second person, an ai or aik in any termination of the first or third person is changed to au or auk, respectively. The terminations $h\tilde{i}$, ai, and aik, are only used when the object, direct or remote, is inferior to the subject. So also au and auk, except that, when they are pronounced with a kind of drawl, the object is mentioned with some, though not great, respect.

AUXILIARY VERBS-

Instead of hai, he is, the following forms are also used:— ah^t , ah, eh, yeh, ya, ha, ehai.

Besides the base 'chha' which we meet in Standard Maithili, there is also a base chhika. Thus, chhikai, he is. A common form of the 3rd singular of the simple verb is achh, or chha, instead of achh'.

In Madhipura, the Past Participle of the verb $h\bar{o}eb$, to become, is $h\bar{o}l$, as well as the $bh\bar{e}l$ of Standard Maithili.

The first of the following specimens is a portion of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, in the form of the dialect spoken in Madhipura. As the dialect so closely resembles Standard Maithilī, and as other specimens will be given, it is unnecessary to give the entire Parable.

Note the tendency to throw a final short i, by epenthesis, into the preceding syllable. Thus chail, for chal', having gone; pair for par', having fallen, and $b\tilde{a}et$, i.e., $b\tilde{a}it$, for $b\tilde{a}t$, having divided. Note, also, the form $kar^i-k\tilde{a}i-k\tilde{o}$, having done.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

In a certain village there dwelt a weaver. When he had saved some ten or fifteen rupees by honest labour, he said to his wife, 'I'll buy a buffalo with this money, and drink the milk and tyre which I get from it.' His wife replied, 'and I'll send some milk and tyre regularly to my own people.' This reply angered the weaver, and he gave her a sound drubbing, saying, 'before I've eaten my milk and tyre, this creature wants to send it to her father's house.' Then up got his wife, and went off in a huff to her own people. The weaver followed her in the hope of bringing her back, and at length reached his father-in-law's. There he met his brother-in-law, who asked him why he had come, 'O, as for me,' he said, 'I've only come to see you.' The brother-in-law. however cross-questioned him, and the weaver told him the whole story in detail. Thereon the brother-in-law gave him a sound drubbing, crying, as he did so, 'Ah, then, so it's your buffalo that breaks down my fence every day!' The weaver cried between the blows, 'Oh! Oh! Why I don't even own a buffalo, so how can it have broken down your fence.' Then said the brother-in-law, 'You fool! If you had not a buffalo, how did my sister send the milk here about which you gave her all that beating and abuse?' Then the weaver understood, and took his wife by the hand and brought her home, and there they lived happy ever afterwards.

EASTERN MAITHILĪ OR GĀOWĀRĪ.

The language of the greater part of Purnea District closely resembles the South Maithilī with which we have just been dealing. East of the Mahananda, however, the bulk of the population speaks a form of Northern Bengali, which has already been described, under the head of that language. We may, therefore, say that Maithilī is the language of Central and Western Purnea, as contrasted with the Bengali of the East of the District. Over this tract, and especially in the West, people of the Brāhman caste speak pure Standard Maithilī similar to what is spoken in North Darbhanga, and in the Supaul Subdivision of Bhagalpur. The number of speakers of this Standard dialect in the District is estimated at 30,000. The corrupt Maithilī which is illustrated by the following specimens is spoken by the illiterate classes throughout the centre and west of the District, and, even to the east of the River Mahananda by Hindūs. The Bengali of the east of the District is principally spoken by Muhammadans. This corrupt form of Maithilī is locally known as Gāôwārī, or the village dialect. If it is desired to give it a more definite name, we may call it Eastern Maithilī. It is estimated that it is spoken by 1,300,000 speakers.

To the above, 1,300,000 speakers of Eastern Maithili, should be added the 2,300 Thārūs who inhabit the northern part of the District, who, so far as I can gather, speak a corrupt form of the dialect.

Full particulars regarding the Thārūs will be found on pp. 311 and ff, under the head of Bhojpurī. Unfortunately, in Purnea, they are so wild that it has been found impossible to procure any specimens of their language.

The total number of speakers of Eastern Maithilī is therefore 1,302,300.

The principal points of difference between it and Standard Maithili are the following:—

- I. PRONUNCIATION.—As in Southern Maithili, in the Simple Present, a long vowel is not shortened before ai or au. Thus, dēkhai, not dekhai, he sees.
 - II. NOUNS.—The termination of the Genitive is k, ke, kar or ker.
- III. PRONOUNS.—One form of the nominative of the pronoun of the first person is $hamm\tilde{e}$, and of the second person, $t\bar{o}h\tilde{e}$. The genitive singular sometimes ends in e; thus, $t\bar{o}har$ or toh^are , thy. The Honorific Pronoun of the second person is ap^ine , $ih\tilde{a}$, or $ah\tilde{a}$. The Demonstrative pronouns are i, \bar{i} , \hat{e} , $ih\bar{a}y$, $eth\bar{i}$, or $ith\bar{i}$, this, and \bar{u} , $w\tilde{e}$, $wah\bar{a}y$, or $uth\bar{i}$, that. The genitives of $j\bar{e}$, who; $s\bar{e}$, he; and $k\bar{e}$, who? are jakar or $j\bar{e}-kar$; takar or $t\bar{e}kar$; and kakar or $k\bar{e}-kar$, respectively. The corresponding oblique forms are $jak^ar\bar{a}$ or $jek^ar\bar{a}$; $tak^ar\bar{a}$ or $tek^ar\bar{a}$; and $kak^ar\bar{a}$ or $kek^ar\bar{a}$. 'What?' is $k\bar{i}$ or $k\bar{a}$, oblique, $kath\bar{i}$ or $kith\bar{i}$. Anyone, someone, is $k\bar{o}i$, oblique, $kath\bar{u}$, $k\bar{o}n\bar{o}$, kak^aro , kek^aro , or kek^arahau . Anything, something, is kuchh or $kuchh^a$, oblique, kuchh, $kuchh^a$, or $keth\bar{i}$. The plural of all pronouns is formed by adding sab, $sib\bar{i}$, $s\bar{i}$, or ar.
- IV. VERBS.—In Standard Maithilī, there are four sets of forms to each person, depending on the respect shown both to the subject and the object. In the first form, the subject is non-honorific, and the object also non-honorific. In the second, the subject is non-honorific, but the object is honorific. In the third, the subject is honorific, and the object non-honorific. In the fourth, both are honorific. In Eastern Maithilī, the forms in which special honour is shown to the object have almost disappeared, that is to say, only the first and third forms are in common use. A few isolated instances of the fourth form will be mentioned subsequently.

As in Standard Maithili, the plural is the same as the singular. The first person is often used honorifically instead of the second.

The following are the terminations used in the Simple Present, the Past, and the Past Conditional:—

Person.	Form I.	Form III.
1 2 3	\widetilde{u} , \overline{o} , $a\widetilde{u}$, $a\widetilde{u}$, or \widetilde{a} \overline{a} , \overline{e} , \widetilde{e} , or $a\widetilde{i}$ ai , aik	ī, iai. d, hâk, hauk. at.

In the Past tense, the third person singular also may end in kai or kaik, and, in the case of transitive verbs, in ak. In the case of intransitive verbs, we may also have, for the same person, the termination $k\bar{a}$.

For the Future, we have the following terminations:—

Person.	Form I.	Form III.
1 2 3	bai, bỗ or baữ bā. bē, bẽ, baĩ, bhế, or mẽ at, tai, it, itai, tah, itah	ah, bī. bâ, bahâk, bhauk ibai, $ib\tilde{o}$, etc., may be substituted for bai, $b\tilde{o}$, etc., thus resembling the Bengali form. Eastern Maithili $dekhib\tilde{o}$, is equivalent to the Bengali $d\bar{e}khiba$, pronounced $dekhib\tilde{o}$, I will see.

Regarding the use of these persons, it may be said that, as a rule, forms ending in ai or aik are used when the direct or remote object of the sentence is inferior to the subject. Moreover, when such terminations have the object, direct or remote, in the second person, they are changed, as in Standard Maithili, to au and auk, respectively.

In the second and third persons, we sometimes find a termination ain used when special respect is shown to the object, direct or remote. If it is in the second person, this ain becomes aun. These are the only relics of the second and fourth forms of Standard Maithilī.

AUXILIARY VERBS-

The initial h of the Standard Maithili hai, he is, is dropped, and we have ai. This verb forms a future, haibai, I shall be, which is conjugated throughout.

Besides the base 'chha,' we have also a strengthened base 'chhika.' Thus, chhai, achh, or chhikai, he is.

The Past tense of the verb $h\bar{o}eb$, to become, is $h\bar{o}l$, not $bh\bar{e}l$, as in Standard Maithili. In this, also, we see an approach to Bengali. $Bh\bar{e}l$ is, however, also used. 'Having become,' is $bh\bar{e}$ -ke.

FINITE VERBS-

The Past Participle in Standard Maithilī ends in al, thus, dēkhal, seen. In Eastern Maithilī it may also end in il. Thus, dēkhil. This is specially the case in Central

88 BIHĀRĪ.

Purnea, on the Bengali Frontier. The same termination may also optionally be preserved in the tenses derived from that participle. Thus, Past, dekhalai or dekhilai, he saw. Here again, we see the shading off into Bengali, which has dekhilen. Sometimes in is substituted for l, as in kainē-chhaun, for kailē-chhaun, (thy father) has made.

Geierson, G. A.,—Seven Grammars of the Dialects and Sub-dialects of the Bihari Language. Part VIII.— Maithil-Bangali Dialect of Central and Western Puraniya. Calcutta, 1887.

The first specimen is the Parable of the Prodigal Son. It is printed in the Kaithi character, and as the copy sent by the Collector is an excellent example of the way in which that character is written in Purnea, it is printed in facsimile. With it is given a transliteration into the Roman character. It has not been thought necessary to give an interlinear translation.

The second specimen is a popular song. It is printed in Kaithī type, and is accompanied by a transliteration and an interlinear and a free translation.

As usual, in written Kaithī, the spelling is capricious. The mistakes have been silently corrected in the transliteration of the first specimen.

For want of betel, my face has become pale, O Friend, For want of my Beloved, has my body become emaciated. The clouds have risen with a sound of thunder, O Friend, When I see that also, my soul is terrified, O Friend. I will assume the garb of an ascetic, O Friend, And will search for my beloved, O Friend.

CHHIKĀ-CHHIKĪ BÖLĪ.

This dialect is almost confined to the south of the Ganges. The only exception is a small tract on the north of the Ganges, in the south of the Gogri Thana of the Monghyr District, in which Chhikā-chhikī has intruded into the territory which properly belongs to Southern Standard Maithili. It is spoken in the eastern part of South Monghyr, in South Bhagalpur, except in a small tract in the west of the Banka Subdivision, and in the north and west of the Sonthal Parganas, where it is separated from Bengali, by the range of hills running from the north-east to the south-west through the centre of that District. This mountain chain forms a natural barrier which precludes the existence of an intermediate form of speech between the two languages. Only in the south-west of the District, in the Subdivision of Deoghur (Déogarh) is there a small tract, south and east of the town of Deoghur, where the two languages overlap without combining, Maithilī being spoken by people from Bihār, and Bengali by those of Bengal. The state of affairs is illustrated in the map opposite. It will, of course, be understood that this description takes no account of the Munda and Dravidian languages which are spoken in the Sonthal Parganas and the neighbouring Districts. Here the aborigines live more or less side by side with the speakers of Aryan languages, and in some parts of the Sonthal Parganas, as many as four languages are spoken by different tribes of people living in the same locality.

The following is the estimated number of people speaking Chhikā-chhikī Bolī.

Name of District	i. 		Number of Speakers.
Monghyr			200,000
Bhagalpur .		.	920,000
Sonthal Parganas		•	599,781
	Total		1,719,781

The name 'Chhikā-chhikī' is that given to the dialect in Bhagalpur. In Monghyr, it is simply called Maithilī, which is misleading. In the Sonthal Parganas, it appears to have been considered to be a kind of Magahī, but this, as will be subsequently shown, is incorrect. It is called 'Chhikā-chhikī Bōlī,' owing to the frequence with which the word chhikai, meaning 'he is,' and its congeners is used. It is unnecessary to describe the grammar of this form of the dialect in detail. It closely resembles the language spoken north of the river in Madhipura and Purnea. Suffice it to draw attention to two peculiarities which it shares with the dialect spoken in Monghyr. The first is the fondness which it has for adding the sound of 'o' in the English word 'hot' to the end of words. This sound it represents by the letter $\overline{\mathbf{at}}$, which is represented in transliteration by \bar{o} . It should be remembered that, in the following specimen, every \bar{o} at the end of a word is pronounced \bar{o} , like the 'o' in the word 'hot.' Thus, what in Standard Maithilī would be apan, own, becomes in South Bhagalpur $ap^n\bar{o}$, pronounced $ap^n\bar{o}$. The other peculiarity is the tendency there is to lengthen a final short i. Thus, instead of the Standard Maithilī kar^i , having done, South Bhagalpur has $kar\bar{o}$. The local dialect has other peculiarities which are not illustrated in the specimen. These can be learnt from the grammar mentioned below.

The language of Bhagalpur is partly influenced by the Bengali spoken in the neighbouring districts of Bengal. Excluding the Sonthal Parganas, it is the most eastern of the South-Gangetic Districts in which Bihārī in any form is spoken. It is of some special interest, because, so far as I know, the first translation of any portion of the Bible into a vernacular language of Northern India of which we have any record was made into it. Some time at the end of the 18th century 'Antonio, a Roman Catholic Missionary at Boglipur on the Ganges, translated the Gospels and the Acts into the dialect of the people of that District.' It is to be regretted that no trace of this translation can now be found.

The following specimen of the dialect is a translation of the Parable of the Prodigal Son. It is printed in the Dēva-nāgarī character, and is accompanied by a transliteration into the Roman character. The dialect so closely resembles that of the country across the Ganges, that an interlinear translation is unnecessary. Although printed in the Dēva-nāgarī character, it should be understood that the usual character employed in Bhagalpur, as in other parts of Bihār, is the Kaithī.

The District of Monghyr, like that of Bhagalpur, is divided into two tracts, a northern and a southern, by the river Ganges. Northern Monghyr consists of the Begusarai Subdivision, and of a portion of the Head-quarters Subdivision. South Monghyr consists of the rest of the Head-quarters Subdivision and of the Subdivision of Jamuī. The main language of the District is Bihārī which is spoken in two dialects. In Begusarai Subdivision, and in the greater part of that portion of the Head-quarters Subdivision which is north of the Ganges, Southern Standard Maithilī is spoken, in the form which has been already illustrated. In the south of Gogri Thana, which is in the Head-quarters Subdivision north of the Ganges, and in the eastern portion of the same Subdivision which is south of the Ganges, in what is known as the Kharagpur country, a variety of Maithilī is spoken, which closely resemble the 'Chhikā-chhikī' dialect of Bhagalpur. In the rest of the District, the main language of the people is the Magahī dialect of Bihārī, with which we have nothing to do at present.

The following version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son is in the form of Maithili which is spoken in the south of Gogri Thana, and in the Kharagpur country. It is spoken, approximately, by 200,000 people.

As it so closely resembles the dialect of Bhagalpur, it is unnecessary to discuss the grammar of the specimen. The following are the main peculiarities of the dialect.

It is very fond of adding a sound resembling the 'ŏ' in the English word 'hot' at the end of a word. It represents this sound sometimes by the letter o as in 'ham²ro', my, and sometimes by 'a', as in 'chal²la', he went. There is no rule observed in this 'o' or 'a' being used according to the fancy of the writer. In the specimen, sometimes one and sometimes the other is used, and I have followed this in the transliteration. All that is to be remembered is that every final 'o' and every final 'a' is to be pronounced like the 'ŏ' in 'hot'.

The vowels e and i are freely interchanged. Thus, in the same sentence, we have both chhilai, and chhelai, he was.

Words, which in Standard Maithilī, as well as in the Southern Standard Maithilī of Begusarai end in a short i, above the line, which is hardly pronounced, in this dialect end in a long $\bar{\imath}$. Thus, $kar\bar{\imath}$, having done, which corresponds to the kar^i of Standard Maithilī and of Begusarai.

Note the forms ham-ar, we, and aponok, your-Honour.

A dialect very similar to that of South Bhagalpur is spoken in the North and West of the Sonthal Parganas, the country of which is a continuation to the south and east of that of the former district. It is, as previously stated, separated from Bengali by the mountain range which runs down the centre of the Sonthal Parganas from north-east to south-west. Only in the Deoghur Subdivision do the two languages meet, and here speakers of Bihārī and of Bengali dwell side by side, each speaking his own language. The dialect in question has hitherto been classed as a form of Magahī, but the specimen shows that it is clearly a variety of Maithilī. As in South Bhagalpur, a final i, which in Standard Maithilī would be short, is here lengthened to ī, but no trace appears in the specimen of the preference for adding an 'o' sounding like the 'o' in the word 'hot' to the end of words, which is so common in Monghyr and South Bhagalpur. It is unnecessary to give any lengthy specimen of the dialect spoken in the Sonthal Parganas. A few lines of the Parable of the Prodigal Son in a version which comes from Deoghur will be sufficient.

WESTERN MAITHILĪ.

This is the language of the Hindus of the Muzaffarpur District. It is also spoken in the east of the District of Champaran, which lies immediately to the north-west of Muzaffarpur. The tract in Champaran is a strip of land about twelve miles long and two miles wide running along the eastern border of the District in Dhākā Thana. As already stated, the language is much infected by the dialects of Bhojpurī spoken in Saran and Champaran. It is estimated that Western Maithilī is spoken by the following number of people:—

Name of District.											Number of Speakers
Muzaffarpur		•			•	•	•	;		•	•	•	1,754,695
Champaran	•	•		•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	28,8 00
					•						To	TAL	1,783,495

The language spoken in the north of the District of Muzaffarpur differs somewhat from that spoken in the south, and hence specimens will be given of both varieties.

WESTERN MAITHILT OF NORTH MUZAFFARPUR.

The language of North Muzaffarpur is peculiar. Immediately to its west is the form of the Bhojpurī dialect, locally known as Madhēsī, which is spoken in the district of Champaran. In North Muzaffarpur, the language is in a transition stage, and is partly Maithilī, and partly Bhojpurī. It might with equal propriety be classed as a form of either language, and in the Grammar mentioned below, it is classed as a form of Bhojpurī. In the present Survey, I class it as a dialect of Maithilī because the country where it is spoken belongs historically to the ancient kingdom of Mithilā. The Brahmans of this part of the country speak a purer form of Maithilī than other castes, and still use the Maithilī alphabet.

The two following specimens are in the form of speech used by the lower castes. It is unnecessary to do more than draw attention to the numerous Bhojpurī forms which occur. Examples are the words $h\hat{a}$, and $h\hat{a}w\hat{e}$, both meaning 'is'.

MAITHILT-BHOJPURT OF SOUTH MUZAFFARPUR.

The form of Maithili spoken in Central and South Muzaffarpur is still more strongly infected with Bhojpuri than that of the North of the District. This will be manifest from the following translation of the Parable of the Prodigal Son for which I am indebted to the kindness of Mr. A. Christian, Sub-Deputy Opium Agent of Tirhut. It was recorded in the Hajipur subdivision, situated in the south of the Muzaffarpur District.

JOLAHĀ BOLĪ.

The Musalmans of North-Gangetic Bihar do not all speak Maithili. Those of the Western Districts, Champaran, Saran, and Muzaffarpur speak a dialect akin to the Awadhi of the North-Western Provinces, which will be discussed when dealing with that form of speech. In Darbhanga most of the followers of Islam do speak the Maithili of their Hindū neighbours, in a corrupt form, mixed up with Arabic and Persian words. The upper classes, as well as the more highly educated Hindūs of that District, speak Urdū or Hindōstānī, the number of speakers of this language being returned as about 4,000. The census shows 338,667 Musalmāns in the Darbhanga District, and, of these, the local officials return 337,000 as speaking this corrupt Maithilī, or, as it is called from the name of the caste of Muhammadan weavers, who are numerous in the District, Jolahā Bōlī.

Specimens of this dialect will be found in the writer's Introduction to the Mai!hilī Language, and, as a further example, the following version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son is appended.

[.] In Bihar, this caste is called Jolaha, with the two first vowels short. Further west they are called Jolaha.

STANDARD MAGAHI.

The following specimen comes from the District of Gaya, where it is acknowledged that the purest form of Magahī is spoken. It is a translation of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, and is printed in Kaithī type, in which character it was originally written. It has been set up in type, exactly as written, so as to show the inaccuracies of spelling, such as the substitution of $\bar{\imath}$ for i and of u for \bar{u} , which are common in the written character. These inaccuracies have been silently corrected in the transliteration. Note that an initial \bar{o} is written $v\bar{o}$, and that s is always written \acute{s} .

¹ This is to represent the force of the termination $th\bar{u}$, instead of $th\bar{\iota}$. It does not mean that the brother has come 'to thee,' but is a kind of dativus commodi, impossible to give accurately in English. The form in $th\bar{u}$ is used because it is thy brother,' who is come. So later on, the feast is not given 'in thy honour' but it is 'thy father' who has given it.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

In a certain forest there dwelt a saint. One day a king lost his way and approached him. When the king saw him he paid him reverence and sat down. The saint seeing that he was thirsty gave him some wild fruit to eat and some water to drink. he ate the fruit and drank the water, the king became glad in heart, and, after sitting for a short time in the cool air, his weariness left him. Then reverently clasping his hands before the holy man he said to him, 'Reverend Sir, deign to tell me some words of advice, by which my welfare may be assured.' The saint replied, 'Keep in thy remembrance these four things: First, to ever keep repeating the name of God; Second, to show compassion to all living creatures; Third, to be tolerant to the errors of others; and Fourthly, never to be vain-glorious for any cause. He who practiseth these four things, with him God is well-pleased, and, in the end, he findeth eternal bliss. these, there is one thing more to be observed by kings, and it is this: - Ever remain firm in justice, and never promote or degrade anyone out of partiality.' When the king had made an end of hearing these words, he fell at the feet of the holy man crying, 'Take thou me as thy disciple.' But the saint in answer said, 'Go thou, and rule thy kingdom justly. To rule with justice is better than sitting in the forest and practising austerities.' In the meantime, the soldiers and followers of the king, who had been seeking him, arrived, and the king bowed down before the saint and returned to his own village.

The dialect of the Patna District is practically the same as that of Gaya. It is not however so pure, being influenced, on the one hand, by the Musalmān element of the City of Patna, and, on the other hand, by the Maithilī spoken north of the Ganges in the Mozaffarpur District.

To the first may be attributed the use of the genitive postposition $k\bar{e}r\bar{a}$, with a feminine $k\bar{e}r\bar{i}$, instead of $k\bar{e}r$ which is an obvious imitation of the Urdū $k\bar{a}$, feminine $k\bar{i}$. We may also, in the same connexion note a common form of the third person singular of the Past tense, ending in is; thus, $d\bar{e}khis$, which is used by Musalmāns, as it is across the Ganges, and which is borrowed from the language current in Oudh.

To the influence of Maithili may be attributed the use of the word gelain, he went, in the first of the two following specimens.

The first specimen from Patna is a little scene in a zamīndārī cutchery. In which a peon, named Gūhan Singh, brings a complaint against a tenant named Jag Mōhan Singh. It is printed in facsimile, exactly as it was written, thus giving an example of Kaithī hand-writing as current in Patna.

The next specimen also comes from Patna, and is a village folksong describing how a young wife rebels against the harsh language of her mother-in-law. As it is in verse, the vowel α which is at the end of every word, but which is not pronounced in prose, is here fully pronounced. So also, the silent α in the middle of a word, which, in prose, is written as a small α above the line. Hence, in both these cases, the α will be found fully written in the lines below. As in the case of the last specimen, it is printed in facsimile.

² kā is an oblique form of ke, borrowed from Bhojpurī.

Magahī is also spoken in the western portion of South-Gangetic Monghyr and in a small tract in the South-West corner of Bhagalpur. The language is the same as that spoken in Patna and Gayā, and it is quite unnecessary to give examples. Along the banks of the Ganges some Maithilī forms have intruded, but they are easily recognised.

AUTHORITY-

GRIERSON, G. A.,—Seven Grammars of the Dialects and Sub-dialects of the Bihari Language, Part VI.

South-Maithil-Magadhi Dialect, of South Munger and the Barh Subdivision of Patna. Calcutta,

Ascending the plateau to the South and South-East of Gaya, we come to the District of Hazaribagh. Here, also, the language is the same as that of Gaya, and further examples are unnecessary. No monograph has been written regarding the Aryan Dialect spoken in this District. It will, of course, be understood that there are Dravidian and Muṇḍā tribes in the District who speak their own languages, which will be treated of in the proper place.

West of Hazaribagh, lies the District of Palamau, on the Eastern border of which, as already shown, Magahī is also spoken. On the South, Hazaribagh is separated from the Chota Nagpur plateau of the District of Ranchi by the valley of the Damuda and its affluents. The dialect of this latter plateau is not Magahī, but is a form of Bhojpurī, although in the North of the area Magahī is spoken by 20,141 settlers who have immigrated from Hazaribagh. We may, therefore, state as general facts, that, of the two plateaux in the Chota Nagpur Division, the Aryan language of the Northern, or Hazaribagh, plateau, is Magahī, and that of the Southern, or Ranchi, plateau, a form of Bhojpurī.

On the East of Hazaribagh, we drop down from the plateau into the Southern portion of the Sonthal Parganas and the North of the District of Manbhum. Bengali is the language of that portion of the Sonthal Parganas which adjoins Hazaribagh, and of the whole of the District of Manbhum. The latter District runs down the East side of the District of Ranchi, and both are bounded on the South by the District of Singhbhum, including the two Native States of Sarai Kala and Kharsawan. These also are below the Ranchi plateau, so also are the five Parganas of Silli, Bundu, Rahe, Baranda, and Tamar, which belong to Ranchi, and are situated in the extreme East of that District, bordering on Manbhum.

Manbhum is a Bengali-speaking District, and the same language is spoken in that part of Singhbhum, known as Dhalbhum, which is South of Manbhum. The State of Sarai Kala consists of two portions, an Eastern and a Western. In the Eastern, both Bengali and Oriyā are spoken by different nationalities. In the rest of Singhbhum, in the State of Kharsawan, and in the Western portion of the State of Sarai Kalā, the main language is Oriyā.

In all these sub-plateau tracts, however, there is a strong element speaking, not the main language of the locality, but some form of Magahi. We find pure Magahi spoken in the Chakradharpur Thana in the North of Singhbhum, just below the plateau, and also in the States of Sarai Kala and Kharsawan. So also, in Manbhum, and, again in Kharsawan, we find a corrupt Magahi spoken principally by Kurmis, which, among other names, is usually called Kurmālī, a form of speech which we shall deal with presently. In the same District pure Magahi is spoken locally by some of the higher castes. In the five sub-plateau Parganas of Ranchi, besides the non-Arvan Mundari. there are spoken both Bengali and a dialect of Magahi, locally known as Pach Pargania or Tamaria, which more nearly approaches the pure form of the language, and which is not so much mixed with Bengali as the dialect of the Manbhum Kurmis. To conclude, as will be shortly explained, the same corrupt Bengali-Magahī language is also spoken in the South-East of the Hazaribagh District, on the border of Manbhum, in the thanas of Gola and Kashmar, and in a part of the Thana of Ramgarh, and, it may be added, in the distant District of Malda. All this will be subsequently dealt with. Suffice it to say that, at present, the Ranchi plateau is surrounded on three sides by a belt of speaker of Magahi, on the North and South, in its pure form, and on the East, mainly in a form corrupted by the neighbouring Bengali.

It must be noted that in this belt, Magahī is not the language of any locality. It is essentially a tribal language. In Manbhum, speakers of Kuṛmālī live side by side with speakers of Bengali, and in Singhbhum and its Native States, side by side with speakers of Oṛiyā, or, in the case of Eastern Sarai Kala, with some speakers of Oṛiyā, and with other speakers of Bengali.

This state of affairs is illustrated in the accompanying map.

The following tables show the relative importance of the various Aryan languages in these bilingual Districts:—

Before dealing with Kuṛmālī, I shall describe the purer form of Magahī, which is current South of the Ranchi Plateau. The two following specimens come from Singhbhum, and may be taken to represent the Magahī of that District, and of Sarai Kala and Kharsawan. It will be seen that it is practically the same as that of Gaya and Hazarıbagh. There is some carelessness shown in the use of the oblique genitive, as in δkar for δk^ar in the first line of the first specimen, but no other peculiarity is presented. The first specimen is a short passage from the Parable of the Prodigal Son. It is quite unnecessary to give the whole, or to give an interlinear translation. The second specimen is a little fable. Here an interlinear translation has been given.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

A certain miser sold all that he had, and bought some gold, which he melted and fashioned into a brick. He then buried it in the ground, and kept watch over it day-by-day. One of his neighbours guessed the secret, and, finding his house one day vacant, took out the gold and carried it off. Some days after, the miser dug the place up, and, finding nothing there, began to cry. His friends hearing his lamentations came to him, and began to console him, saying 'brother, why art thou grieving? As long as the gold was with thee thou wast nothing but its watchman; now, therefore, put a stone into the same hole, and imagine it to be thy lost gold.'

The riches of a man who neither uses them for the calamities or distresses of others, nor enjoys them himself, are of no use, and fly away just like the miser's gold.

EASTERN MAGAHI.

It has been already pointed out that in the localities where Bihārī meets Bengali, we find one of two conditions in existence. North of the Ganges, as a rule, the two languages gradually merge into each other, and we notice an intermediate dialect, such as, for instance, the Siripuriā of Eastern Purnea, which it is difficult to define either as the one or as the other language. The District of Malda presents an exception, for, here, we see two, and even three, nationalities living side by side, each adhering to its own form of speech. Thus, in one and the same village, there will be found speakers of Bihārī, Santālī, and Bengali, according to the respective origins of the speakers.

South of the Ganges, we come upon the same state of affairs as in Malda. For instance, as has already been shown, there is a tract in the Deogarh Sub-division of the Sonthal Parganas, in which both Maithilī and Bengali, besides various Muṇḍā languages, are spoken side by side, without uniting into one general, composite speech. Going further south into Manbhum, we find that Bengali extends on the west up to the foot of the Ranchi and the Hazaribagh Plateaux. There it suddenly stops, face to face with the various forms of Bihārī which compose the Aryan speech of the highlands of Chota Nagpur.

There are, however, emigrants from these highlands into the Bengali-speaking area. These have retained their own language, though, as could only be expected of a small people living for generations in contact with a great people, they have not resisted the temptation of borrowing words and grammatical forms from those amongst whom they live. The result is a kind of mixed dialect essentially Bihārī in its nature, but with a curious Bengali colouring. It is the same with the speakers of Bihārī in Malda. It must be remembered that in each case, the dialect is not a local one. It is not, as in the case of Siripuriā, the language of a border tract between a country whose language is Bengali, and a country whose language is Bihārī. In each case this dialect is the language of a strange people in a strange land. All round them, and usually in a great majority, live the true people of the country, who speak a Bengali of considerable purity, and quite distinct from the mixed Bihārī spoken by these immigrants.²

In Manbhum this language is principally spoken by people of the Kuṛmī caste, who are numerous in the Districts of Chota Nagpur, and in the Orissa Tributary State of Mayurbhanja. They are an aboriginal tribe of Dravidian stock and should be distinguished from the Kurmīs of Bihar who spell their name differently, with a smooth, instead of a hard, r.¹ The two quite distinct tribes have been mixed up in the Census, but as their habitats are also distinct, the following figures may be taken as showing with considerable accuracy the number of Kuṛmīs in the area under consideration:—

² To avoid misapprehension, I wish it to he clearly understood that the above remarks are in no way to be taken as deciding any ethnological problems, and that in talking of the Bengali speakers as the true people of the country, I do not mean that they necessarily are the autochthones of Manbhum. I am simply writing from the point of view of actual existing linguistic facts, and, from that point of view, Bengali speakers are, amongst the speakers of Aryan languages, the people who are in possession of the district at the present day.

	Nam	e of Dia	strict o	r Stat	e•					Number of Kurmis.

These Kuṛmīs do not all speak corrupted Bihārī. Many of them speak Bengali and Oṛiyā. On the other hand, in Manbhum, it is not confined to this one caste, but is also spoken by people of other tribes. The same dialect is spoken by aborigines in the Chhattisgarh Feudatory State of Bamra, where it is known as Sadrī Kōl. In the Orissa Tributary States, the Kuṛmīs nearly all talk Bengali, although living in an Oṛiyā-speaking country, and only very few have been returned as speaking the mixed dialect. It will thus be understood that the figures for the people speaking it will not agree with those given above for the tribe. The corrupted dialect has been returned under various names, but in every case it is essentially the same form of speech. The following table shows the number of its speakers, and the name under which, in each case, it was returned:—

² These figures, however, include speakers of pure Magabī, who are Zamindars and Magabiyā Brāhmans of Jharia, Katras, and Nawagarh. Separate figures for these are not available. The original figures received from Manbhum were 120,798, but these include some 9,700 speakers of the Kārmālī dialect of Santālī, which is quite distinct.

It will be most convenient to call this form of speech 'Eastern Magahī' for none of the local names applies sufficiently to all the speakers.

In Manbhum and Kharsawan this corrupt Magahī is spoken principally by Kuṛmīs, and is locally known as Kuṛmālī Ṭhār. The word 'Ṭhār' means literally fashion, and the name means the Aryan language as spoken in the Kuṛmālī fashion. It is also known as Korṭhā, or, in the north-west of Manbhum as Khaṭṭā, or, in the west of the same district, as Khaṭṭāhī. It is spoken all over the district, but most generally in the west and south-west. It is, in Manbhum, written in the Bengali character, and this has led to its having heen described by some as a dialect of that language.

The following are the principal peculiarities of the dialect, as exhibited in the specimens received from Manbhum:—

Pronunciation.—A long \bar{o} becomes a (pronounced in the Bengali fashion like the o in 'hot') thus for $l\bar{o}k\bar{e}r$, of a man, we find $lak\bar{e}r$; for $\bar{o}\cdot kar$ of him, (a Bihārī form), a-kar; we find in the same sentence both $g\bar{o}r^{o}khiy\bar{a}$ and $gar^{o}khiy\bar{a}$, a shepherd; for $k\bar{o}na$, anything, we have kanha; for $m\bar{o}r$, my, and $t\bar{o}r$, thy, mar and tar; and for $bh\bar{o}j$, a feast, bhaj. So many others. The word $chh\bar{o}t\bar{o}$ (for $chh\bar{o}ta$ in standard Bengali) is, however, pronounced chhutu.

An i or e is apt to change a preceding a to e. Thus Bengali kahilek, he said, becomes $kehal\bar{a}k$; kahi-ke, having said, kehi-ke; besi-ke having sat, for basi-ke; $ker^al\bar{e}$ $\bar{a}h\tilde{a}$, I have done; keri-ke, having done; $kh^gen\bar{e}$, at a time. So also $ma\ddot{a}dh\bar{e}$ for $madhy\bar{e}$, in.

In the word hichha, for ichcha, a wish, h has been prefixed.

Nouns.—The pleonastic suffix, $t\bar{a}$, $t\bar{a}i$ or $t\bar{a}y$ is very common. Sometimes, it has the force of the English definite article. Thus $chh\bar{a}w\bar{a}\cdot t\bar{a}$, the child; $b\bar{e}t\bar{a}\cdot t\bar{a}y$, the son. Its genitive case is tek, as in ghari-tek $b\bar{a}d\bar{e}$, after a space of twenty minutes. Here it gives the sense of 'about.'

The syllable ek is added in the sense of the English indefinite article. Thus, thar-ek, a little. Ek- $t\bar{a}$, is used in the same sense, as in ek- $t\bar{a}$ muni \hat{s} - $k\bar{e}$ $d\bar{a}ki$ -ke, having called a servant.

In the declension of nouns, the sign for the Accusative-Dative is $k\bar{e}$, which belongs both to Bihārī and Bengali. Thus $b\bar{a}p-k\bar{e}$, to the father. The Bihārī termination $l\bar{a}y$ or $l\bar{a}i$ is also used for the Dative, as in $ch\bar{a}r\bar{a}o-l\bar{a}i$, for feeding.

The Genitive has several terminations, viz.—

- (1) er. This is the regular Bengali termination, as in laker, of a man.
- (2) ē-kar. This occurs only in Bhagamānē-kar, of God.
- (3) kar. This is a Bihārī termination. It occurs in daulat-kar, of the wealth.
- (4) kēr. This is also Bihārī. It occurs in muluk-kēr, of the country; śūar-kēr, of the hogs; miţhāi-kēr, of the sweetmeats.
- (5) ek. This is the commonest termination of all. It is a corruption of the Bihārī ak. It occurs in dhanin-ek, of a rich man; bāp-ek, of the father; Bhagamān-ek, of God; muniś-ek, of a servant. If a noun ends in ā there are irregularities. Thus, we have ghari-t-ek, of about twenty minutes; bēṭā-k, of a son; lā-h-ek, of a boat (lā, for nā).

The Instrumental and Locative, are formed by adding \tilde{e} . Thus, $b\tilde{a}d\tilde{e}$, afterwards; $gh\tilde{a}r\tilde{e}$, in the house; $h\tilde{a}th\tilde{e}$, on the hand; $dak\tilde{a}n\tilde{e}$, in the shop; $bh\tilde{u}kh\tilde{e}$, by hunger.

The Plural is usually the same as the Singular, but in the case of human beings gulā is added. Thus muniś-gulā-kē, to the servants; bābu-gulā-k, of the Bābūs.

Pronouns.—The following forms occur:—

1st Person, $m\tilde{a}y$, I; $ma-k\bar{e}$, to me; mar, my, but $h\bar{a}mar$ pash, near me; $h\bar{a}m^ar\bar{a}$, we; $h\bar{a}m^ar\bar{a}-k\bar{e}$, to us; $h\bar{a}m^ar\bar{a}-kar$, of us.

2nd Person, tay, thou; tar, thy, but taharē, or tarē, ēsan, like thee.

3rd Person, \bar{u} , he; $a-k\bar{e}$, $ak^ar\bar{a}-ke$, him; akar, $ak^ar\bar{a}$, his (the latter only once, agreeing with a nominative plural).

 $T\tilde{e}y$, $s\bar{e}$, he; $t\bar{a}$ - $kh\bar{e}$ (sie) to him; $t\bar{a}$ -kar, of him. $T\bar{a}k^ar\bar{e}$ ($h\tilde{a}t\bar{e}$), (for the reason) of that. Similarly $ek^ar\bar{e}$ ($h\tilde{a}t\bar{e}$), (for the reason) of this; $t\bar{a}r\bar{a}d\bar{e}r$, of them.

The Relative and Correlative Pronouns are je, and se.

Adjectival pronouns are $ah\bar{e}$ and $s\bar{e}i$, that, and $eh\bar{e}$, this. Kea is anyone, and kanha is anything.

The Verb.—Singular and Plural are, as a rule, the same.

AUXILIARY VERBS, AND VERBS SUBSTANTIVE.

PRESENT-

(1) $\bar{a}h\tilde{a}$, I am: (2) $\bar{a}his$, thou art; $\bar{a}h\bar{e}$, $\bar{a}hek$, he is. Once, as an auxiliary, $\bar{a}ih\bar{o}k$, he is; $n\bar{e}kh\bar{e}$, $n\bar{e}khekh$ (sic), $n\bar{e}khat$, he is not. Hek, hekek, hetek, he becomes, he is going on.

PAST-

- (1) Helaõ, I was.
- (3) Hel, helek, he was.

Also, (1) $rah\tilde{a}$, I was.

(3) rahē, rehek, he was.

OTHER FORMS-

Haï-ke, having become.

Helei, heli, on becoming.

Ahabē keris, thou doest existing, thou existest.

FINITE VERBS.

PRESENT TENSE.

1st Person, $l\bar{a}ga\bar{\sigma}$, I seem; $kh\bar{a}tah\tilde{a}$, I labour. 2nd Person, keris, thou doest.

IMPERATIVE.

1st Person, $chal\hat{e}$, let us come.

PRESENT DEFINITE.

Only one instance occurs, in the curious form, khāwāis-āhē, he is feeding.

IMPERFECT.

Only one instance, bēche-helaō, I was selling.

HABITUAL PAST.

 $P\bar{a}ot\bar{a}k$, he (they) used to get; $p\bar{a}r^at\bar{a}k$, he (they) used to be able.

FUTURE.

Pāyam, I shall get; kaham, I shall say; kerbēi, we shall do; debēi, we shall give. Past—

1st Person.—This occurs under three forms; viz.:—

- (a) $P\bar{a}ola\tilde{o}$, I obtained; $keh^ala\tilde{o}$, I said; $khuj^ala\hat{o}$, I demanded; $dekh^ala\tilde{o}$, I saw; $l\bar{a}g^ala\tilde{o}$, I began; $tek^ala\tilde{o}$, I obstructed.
- (b) Pāolēi, I obtained; delēi, I gave.
- (c) Ațāolāhan, I reached; śudhāolāhan, I enquired.

2nd Person.—Only one instance, lāgāolē, thou didst commence.

3rd Person.—This usually ends in $\bar{a}k$, as in $keh^{a}l\bar{a}k$, he said; $del\bar{a}k$, he gave; $guch\bar{a}ol\bar{a}k$, he lost; $sir\bar{a}ol\bar{a}k$, he finished; $rah^{a}l\bar{a}k$, he stayed; $ker^{a}l\bar{a}k$, he made; $p\bar{a}ol\bar{a}k$, he obtained; $kh\bar{a}ol\bar{a}k$, he ate; $b\bar{a}ch^{a}l\bar{a}k$, he survived; $l\bar{a}g^{a}l\bar{a}k$, they began; $sudh\bar{a}l\bar{a}k$, he (they) enquired; $bujh\bar{a}ol\bar{a}k$, he entreated; $ur\bar{a}ol\bar{a}k$, he wasted.

In the case of Intransitive verbs sometimes the Bihārī custom of dropping all terminations is followed, as in $g\bar{e}l$, he went.

Sometimes almost pure Bengali forms are used, as in kehalek, he said; kahalen, he said.

PERFECT.—This is built on the Bihārī system.

- 1st Person.—(a) Transitive verbs, $ker^a l\bar{e}-\bar{a}h\tilde{a}$, I have done; $k\bar{a}t^a l\bar{e}-\bar{a}h\tilde{a}$, I have disobeyed.
 - (b) Intransitive verbs, maral-āhâ, I have died.

2nd Person.—Transitive verb, delē-āhis, thou hast given.

- 3rd Person.—(a) Transitive verb, $th\bar{a}n^al\bar{e}-\bar{a}h\bar{e}$, he has considered; $\bar{a}n^al\bar{e}-\bar{a}h\bar{e}$, he has brought. Also $p\bar{a}ol\bar{e}-\bar{a}\tilde{r}h\bar{o}k$, he has got.
 - (b) Intransitive verb, $\bar{a}ol$ - $\bar{a}hek$, he has come; $g\bar{e}l$ - $\bar{a}hek$, he has gone.

PLUPERFECT.— $R\bar{a}kh^{a}l\bar{e}$ - $rah\bar{e}$, he appointed (a long time ago); another form is mari $rah\bar{e}$, or mari rehek, he died (a long time ago). Before the auxiliary the final l of the Past Participle of an intransitive verb, becomes r. Thus $g\bar{e}r$ (for $g\bar{e}l$) $rah\tilde{a}$, I had gone; $g\bar{e}r$ $rah\bar{e}$, he had gone.

PAST CONJUNCTIVE.—The following appears to belong to this tense: keretēlia, (that) they might have made.

Conjunctive Participle.—This is pure Bihārī. Thus,— $b\tilde{a}$ ti-ke, having divided; $l\bar{e}i$ -ke, having taken; $j\bar{a}i$ -ke, having gone; keri-ke, having made; kehi-ke, having said, and many others.

As examples of Compound Verbs, we have dēi-delāk, he gave; dauri jāi-ke, having run, and others.

THE CONDITIONAL PARTICIPLE— $del\tilde{e}i$, on giving; $h\tilde{e}l\tilde{e}i$, heli, on becoming.

Other forms are ghurek berā, the hour of returning; khābār, of eating.

Idiom -

The Negative is nehi or niki.

Example of a Potential Verb,— $sir\bar{a}ol\bar{e}$ $p\bar{a}r^at\bar{a}k$, they used to be able to finish. Example of an Inceptive Verb,— $kere\ l\bar{a}g^al\bar{a}k$, they began to make.

Note the form richek, a little, a corruption of the Bihārī rachi-ke, or achik.

The following specimens come from Manbhum, and are in the Bengali character. They may also be taken as illustrating the Kuṛmālī of Kharsāwān. They have been written down for the purposes of the Survey by Babu Sital Chandra Chatterjia, Sub-Inspector of Schools:—

SADRĪ KŌL.

The main Aryan language of the Feudatory State of Bamra, which lies to the West of the Keonjhar State, is Oriyā. Most of the aborigines speak Mundā languages, but some of them use a corrupt Aryan language, which is locally known as Sadrī, or more correctly Sadarī Kōl. As in the case of the Sadrī Korwā sub-dialect of Chhattīsgarhī, the word 'Sadrī' is used when an aboriginal tribe abandons its own language and takes to an Aryan one. Sadrī Kōl is reported to be spoken by 4,194 people. It is not, as might be expected, a dialect of the surrounding Oriyā, but is a form of the Eastern Magahī dialect. Immediately to its East, in the States of Keonjhar and Mayurbhanja, a form of Eastern Magahī is also spoken, called Kuṛmālī, but Sadrī Kōl does not agree so closely with this as it does with the Kuṛmālī Thār of Manbhum and Kharsawan, with which it is practically identical. The pronunciation, too, is the same, the vowel a being sounded as in Oṛiyā, viz., like the o in 'hot.'

Two specimens are given of this dialect. The first is a short extract from the Parable of the Prodigal Son, and the other a folk-tale. A few instances of the influence of Orivā will be noticed. Such are the genitive $m\bar{a}l$ - $j\bar{a}lar$, of property, and plurals like suar- $m\bar{a}n\bar{e}$, swine; $h\bar{a}m^{a}r\bar{e}$ - $m\bar{a}n$, we.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

Once upon a time there lived an old couple in a certain village. A number of the villagers used to go abroad to earn money, and would return rich men. This roused the old woman's envy, and said she, 'see how much these people bring home from their earnings. Let us go too to try our luck.' So the old man went and watched at a place where an elephant of Heaven used to come down and graze all day on paddy. According to his custom he came down and ate his fill, and was returning to the City of

Heaven, when the oldster caught hold of his tail and was carried up with him. He arrived there safely, and found plenty of work at high wages; so when he had earned a great deal, he again caught hold of the elephant's tail, and was carried down home again. 'See,' said he to his wife, 'how much I have earned.' When the old woman saw it, her soul was filled with joy, and she replied, 'I'll go too.' So they both set out, and both caught hold of the elephant's tail and in due course arrived at the City of Heaven. There they earned plenty and ate well, till one day the old man thought over things, and, after telling his better half, caught hold of the elephant's tail and went down home to fetch up his fellow-villagers. When he got there he asked them all to come back with him. 'Why,' said he, 'are you all dying here of hunger, when there is plenty of paddy and rice to be got in the City of Heaven. Moreover, the seer up there is a very big one.' Then the villagers thought over the matter and agreed to go with the oldster. So they went out and watched for the elephant, and when he was starting home the old man caught hold of his tail. Another fellow caught him round the back. Then another caught the second round the back, and another the third, and so on till all were hanging like the tail of a kite from the elephant's tail, each one clasping the waist of the one above him. They had got half way to the City of Heaven when one of the rear men called out to the oldster, 'hulloa, old man, you are taking us a very long way. How big is the seer up there?' The oldster held on to the elephant's tail with one hand, and motioned with the other saying, 'it is so big.' Then another fellow shouted, 'I couldn't hear what you said. How big is the seer?' The oldster let go with both hands, saying, 'it is so big.' So the elephant went on his way to the City of Heaven alone, and all the men fell down to the earth and were killed.

Eastern Magahī is also spoken in the south-east of the Hazaribagh District, on the border of Manbhum, in the Thanas of Gola and Kashmar, and in a portion of Thana Ramgarh. Although still more closely based on standard Magahī than the Kuṛmālī Ṭhār of Manbhum, it possesses the remarkable peculiarity of being what might be called a bi-lingual language. I mean that while in the main it is Magahī, it adopts into its texture Bengali words and phrases, nay, even entire sentences, as they stand, without any alteration. For instance, in the specimen which follows, the first sentence is pure Bengali, while the second is Magahī. The two languages, as elsewhere south of the Ganges, are mechanically mixed, and are not chemically combined. This presence of a very evident Bengali element, and the fact that it is, like Kuṛmalī Ṭhār, written in the Bengali character, has led the dialect to be incorrectly called Bengali, and, as such, it has been returned by the local officials. A perusal of the specimen will, however, show, that it is really Magahī, and that the Bengali element has been introduced much as some English people introduce French phrases into their language.

The following specimen is the Parable of the Prodigal Son. It is in the Bengali character, and awkward attempts have been made to represent the Bihārī sounds, to which that alphabet and system of pronouncing it, are not adapted. These attempts have been altered to the normal Bihārī system of spelling in the transliteration.

¹ In India, the weight known as a seer varies from place to place. Of course, the rate of sale being the same, the larger the seer, the better for the purchaser.

In the extreme east of the Ranchi District, on the border of Manbhum, are the five sub-plateau Parganas of Silli, Baranda, Rahe, Bundu, and Tamar. A reference to the map facing p. 140 will show that the east and south-east of Ranchi is a meeting place of three overlapping forms of Aryan speech. In the south-east, the main language is the Nagpuriā Bhojpurī, which is the Aryan form of speech used in the rest of the District, but here the Jain Mānjhīs and the well-to-do cultivating and trading castes speak the Sarākī form of Bengali. In the five Parganas above-mentioned, the main Aryan language is a form of Eastern Magahī, but, here also, the Bengali Sarākī overlaps in Pargana Tamar. It may be added that, in the five Parganas, Nagpuriā is also spoken by some people, though, for the sake of clearness, this is not shown in the map. Finally, over the whole of both the South-east and the East, the general language is the non-Aryan Muṇdārī, with which we are not at present concerned, and which is not shown in the map, as it only deals with Aryan languages.

The form of Eastern-Magahī spoken in the five Parganas is known as Pāch Parganiā. As it is strongest in Pargana Tamar, it is also called Tamariā. It closely resembles the Kuṛmālī Ṭhār of Manbhum. The principal apparent difference is the result of the characters employed in writing. In Manbhum, the character adopted is the Bengali, and the language is looked at, so to speak, through Bengali spectacles. Hence words are spelled as a Bengali would spell them, and, more especially, an $\tilde{\sigma}$ -sound is represented as elsewhere in Manbhum, by the letter \mathfrak{A} a. In the five Parganas, on the other hand, the Kaithī alphabet is used, and the language is looked at through Hindī spectacles, and an $\tilde{\sigma}$ -sound is represented by the letter \mathfrak{A} $\tilde{\sigma}$.

We also see signs of the influence of Sarākī Bengali¹ in the aspiration of words like jhan for jan, a person.

Instances of the representation of the \bar{o} -sound of the letter a occur on almost every line. The spelling is capricious, and this is retained, as illustrating how the pronunciation, affected by the Western Bengali, can only be represented with difficulty in the Kaithi character. Thus, we have $r\bar{o}h\bar{e}$ for $rah\bar{e}$, he was; $k\bar{o}hal$ and kahal, to say; $kot^an\bar{a}$, for $kat^an\bar{a}$, how many?

The Declension of nouns follows Magahī, the only exception being the Dative Plural of chākar, a servant, which is chākar-gulā-gē.

As regards Pronouns, the word for 'I' is $m\tilde{o}\tilde{e}$ or $ma\tilde{e}$. The word for 'Your Honour' is $r\tilde{a}ur$, which is borrowed from Nagpuriä.

As to Verbs, we have $hek\tilde{o}$ for 'I am,' which is a corruption of the Magahi $hik\tilde{u}$. We have also the form which was noted in Kuṛmāli Ṭhār, viz., $\bar{a}h\tilde{o}$, I am; $\bar{a}his$, thou art; $\bar{a}h\bar{e}$, he is, and so on. We have, moreover, forms like $d\bar{e}t\tilde{o}-\bar{e}$ he used to give; $m\bar{o}r\bar{o}t\bar{o}-h\tilde{o}$, I am dying. The first person singular of the Future ends in $m\tilde{u}$, as in $kah^am\tilde{u}$, I will say. A final short i is pronounced in the preceding syllable, as in so many Bengali dialects and as in Nagpuriā. Thus, we have $ka\ddot{v}$, having done, and many others. Similarly there is $sa\ddot{u}b$ for sabu, all. The Conjunctive Participle is formed by the addition of $k\bar{o}han$, or kahan as in $u\ddot{v}h-k\bar{o}han$ or $u\ddot{v}h-kahan$, having arisen. It will be remembered that in Sadrī Köl we had khan.

This dialect is classed as a form of Magahī, but it varies so greatly in the mouths of different people, that it might sometimes be classed as a form, not of Magahī, but of Nagpuriā Bhojpurī. The following specimen is, as a glance will show, clearly Magahī and not Nagpuriā, but the list of words and sentences given subsequently on pp. 327 and following, are equally clearly Nagpuriā. In classifying the dialect, I have followed the specimen, as being less liable to be affected by the personal equation than a list of disconnected words and grammatical forms.

It has been already pointed out that nearly all the 40,000 Kuṛmīs who inhabit the Orissa Tributary States, speak a form of Western Bengali, though the other Aryan-speaking inhabitants of that area have Oṛiyā for their mother tongue. In the States of Mayurbhanja and Keonjhar, however, 280 Kuṛmīs have been returned as speaking a dialect named Kuṛumālī, which, on examination, turns out to be another instance of Eastern Magahī. Here, the corrupting element is more Oṛiyā than Bengali, and, moreover, the specimens received being written in the Oṛiyā character, they have necessarily acquired a further resemblance in orthography to that language, which probably does not properly belong to them. Instances of borrowing from Oṛiyā abound, but even some of these are curious distortions. For instance, the word for 'was,' helēk, is evidently a corruption of the Magahī halaik, but the a of the first syllable has been changed to e, under the influence of the Oṛiyā helā, while Bengali has possibly had a share in changing the final aik to ēk. On the whole the dialect agrees very closely with the Kuṛmālī Ṭbār of Manbhum. We have the same representation of an o-sound by a and the same base, ah, for the auxiliary verb.

It will be sufficient to give one specimen. It is the statement in a criminal court of a person accused of murder. It is written in the Oriyā running hand and is printed in facsimile.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

Question.—Where is now Jēnā Singh of the village of Paṇḍupāl, Parganā Kurāḍihā?

Answer.—He is now dead.

- Q.—How did he die?
- A.—Budhu-rām Singh, of Ask anda in Parganā Kurādihā, clubbed him to death.
- Q.—How many times did he strike him, and in what part of his body?
- A.—He gave Jēnā Singh only one blow under the right ear. Immediately on receiving the blow he fell down there and then.
 - Q.—When he was struck, did you see it with your own eyes?
 - A.—Yes. I saw it.
 - Q.—When did this take place, and at what hour?
- A.—At one hour of the night. It was then dark. This was on the night of the Sunday before last.
 - Q.—Why did Budhu-rām kill Jēnā Singh?
- A.—Last year, I applied vermilion to the forehead of Jēnā Singh's daughter, as a preliminary to marrying her. Moreover, his son, Manglā Singh, had similarly put vermilion on the head of my sister, Guni. But when afterwards Jēnā Singh refused to give his daughter to me in marriage, there was held a caste-assembly to settle the dispute. After that, Budhu-rām, who is my cousin and the son of my elder uncle, killed Jēnā Singh on the Mitrapur road, when he was giving his daughter to Pitēi.
 - Q.—Where did he kill Jēnā Singh?
- A.—Jēnā Singh was coming from Mitrapur. On the way, after crossing the Buṛhā-balang river, and after passing along the path which led through Budhu-rām's mustard-field, and entering another field belonging to Budhiā Singh, then it was that Budhu-rām struck him.
 - Q.—What were you doing at the time?
 - 4.—I was standing there.
 - Q.—Was anyone else there at the time?

- A.—The present accused persons were there, viz., Lakshman Singh, Ruhiā Singh, Bānu Singh, and Pāndu Singh. But Khushālī Mājhī was not there. He was some fifty cubits away from me, in a mustard-field.
 - Q.—Did you or anyone else also strike Jēnā Singh ?
 - A.-Neither I nor any of the other accused persons struck him.
 - Q.—Whose is this club which is marked for identification with the letter 'Ka'?
 - A.—It belongs to Budhu-ram Singh. It is with it that he struck the blow.
 - Q.—Whose are this severed head, and this coarse sheet, and this wooden chaplet?
 - A.—They all belong to Jena Singh.

It will be observed that the last District named in the list given on p. 146 is the North-Gangetic one of Malda. Here the dialect is not spoken by Kurmis, but by other castes of South-Bihar nationality, who have crossed the Ganges and settled in that district. As in the other localities, it is distinctly a form of Magahī, and it is not clear how this form of speech has come to be spoken there. The dialect of Bihārī which is spoken to the north, in Purnea, and, to the west, in Bhagalpur and the Sonthal Parganas, is Maithili, and the main language of Eastern Malda is a form of Bengali. So also to the south of the District. One explanation, which is ingenious, but which, so far as I know, is unsupported by any admitted facts, is found in a tradition that there was a wave of conquering inhabitants of Gaya and Patna, which occupied the Districts, in order, of Monghyr, Bhagalpur, the Sonthal Parganas, and Malda. In the two first Districts. they became absorbed into the allied Maithili-speaking race which then occupied the country, and adopted their language. So also in the North-western half of the Sonthal Parganas, where they were separated from the Bengalis, who encroached from the south and east, by the mountains in the centre of that District. In Malda, however, they came into contact with an alien, Bengali-speaking race, with whom they did not mix, and whose language they declined to adopt; although, in process of time, their own tongue gradually adopted some of its more striking forms.

The dialect is locally known as Hindi or as Khontai, and is principally spoken by people of the Chain, Nagar, and other similar castes in West Malda. The language of each caste differs slightly. Indeed all over Malda District, we find a curious mixture of language, different nationalities and tribes in one and the same village each speaking its own language, which may be Santālī, Bihārī, or Bengali. Even each of these three languages varies according to the caste of the speaker. Khontāi is reported as being spoken by 180,000 people.

Both the following specimens are written in the Bengali character. Hence it must be remembered that we are looking at Magahī through Bengali spectacles. The spelling is therefore eccentric from the point of view of one accustomed to the same language written in the Dēva-nāgarī character.

The only form which need be noticed is the word $h\bar{o}y^{o}chhi$, it is, which is borrowed from the neighbouring Maithilī of Purnea.

The first specimen is the Parable of the Prodigal Son, and the second, a short folk-tale. Both have been most carefully written by Babu Radhesh Chandra Set.

STANDARD BHOJPURI.

Standard Bhojpuri centres round the town of Bhojpur, which is situated on the bank of the Ganges in the North-West of the Shahabad District. From this it extends to the east and south over the whole of that district, and is bounded in the first of these directions by the river Sone, which, however, it crosses at the south, reaching for a few miles into the District of Palamau. To the west, it crosses the frontier between the Lower Provinces and those of the north-west, and covers the whole of the south Gangetic portion of Ghazipur.

Standard Bhojpuri is also spoken north of the Ganges in the districts which border on the Ganges and are opposite Shahabad, viz., Saran, Ballia, and Ghazipur. It is spoken over the whole of Ballia, over the south and the eastern half of Ghazipur (it should be remembered that this district lies on both sides of the Ganges), Western Bhojpuri similar to that spoken in Benares District being spoken in Western Ghazipur. In Saran, it is confined to the more southern parganas. As we go north, the language gradually changes to what may be called Northern Bhojpuri, which is spoken in various forms over Northern and Central Saran, and in the eastern parts of Gorakhpur. No figures are available to show the number of people in Saran, who speak each form of the dialect, nor would it be easy to do so under any circumstances, for the two forms of speech differ so slightly, and merge so gradually into each other, that there is a large area which might very properly be claimed by both. We shall not, however, be far wrong, if, subject to certain explanations to be made later on, we say that, of the 2,404,5001 people returned from that district as speaking Bhojpuri, about a million speak the Standard form of the dialect. We may, therefore, put down the number of speakers of standard Bhojpuri as follows:-

Name of Distric	st.										S	Number of people peaking Standard Bhojpuri.
Shahabad	•		•	•	•	•		•	•			1 001 252
Palamau	•					•						50,000

The Town and Pargana of Bhojpur, from which the Bhojpuri dialect takes its name, are situated in the Shahabad District, hence the form of the dialect which is current in that district may be considered to be the purest. The two following specimens come from Shahabad, and the language is that illustrated in the preceding grammatical sketch. Besides Bhojpuri, the local authorities reported a separate sub-dialect spoken by 171 Kharwārs, a wild tribe inhabiting the south of the district. An examination, however, of the specimen sent of the Kharwār language shows that it is the same as the ordinary Bhojpuri of the District. It is not sufficiently corrupt to entitle it to be classed as a broken dialect. The total Bhojpuri-speaking population of Shahabad is therefore 1,901,182+171 or 1,901,353.

The first specimen is a translation of the Parable of the Prodigal Son. It is printed in the Dēva-nāgarī character, in which character the specimens, as received, were written. It has the advantage of distinguishing between short and long e and o.

Deposition of Ajodhyā Rāy, of Nawādā Bén, Pargana Ārō,

I am an owner of Nawada, and am acquainted with both the Complainant and with the Accused Person. Formerly the house (in dispute) was in my share of the village, and, when subsequently, there was a formal partition of the property, it also fell in my share.

Question.—Has the Complainant anything to do with that house?

Answer.—Nothing whatever. I used formerly to get the ground-rent for it from Phōṛhā Singh. Now I get it from the Complainant. Phōṛhā had a brother named Dasaī. Bhandū used for long to be absent from home on service. He still does this, and, this time, had been away for a year. He had left Dasaī's wife in his home. Eighteen or nineteen days ago he went to the house. The Complainant, Gobrī Rāy, and I went to Gōbardhan Rāy, and we said to him that the house was Bhandū's, and that he (Gōbardhan) should give it up. The accused said he would do no such thing. His cattle are still tethered there. When we spoke to him, he said we might do whatever came into our heads, but he would not give up the house.

It may be stated as a broad fact that, south of the Ganges, Standard Bhojpuri is bounded on the east and south by the left bank of the River Sone. Similarly the District of Shahabad is bounded on the east and south by the same river. On the south, however, the language has crossed the Sone and occupies a small strip of ground about eight miles wide on its right bank in the district of Palamau where it is spoken by about 50,000 people. Beyond this it becomes the impure Nagpuriā Bhojpurī which extends across the Ranchi Plateau of Chota Nagpur.

Although the language spoken in this small strip is standard Bhojpurī, it has a few divergencies from the examples which have just been dealt with. For this reason I give the two following specimens of the language of this tract. The first is a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, and the second is a villager's account of his adventures in the jungle. The principal divergencies from Standard Bhojpurī are the following.

In the pronouns, the direct form of the Genitive is sometimes used instead of the oblique. Thus, we have $ham \bar{a}pan$ (instead of $ap^an\bar{a}$) $b\bar{a}b\bar{u}$ - $j\bar{\imath}$ $k\bar{\imath}h\tilde{a}$ $j\bar{a}\tilde{\imath}$, I will go to my father. Instead of kichhu, we have kichh, anything. For 'he,' we have $uh\bar{a}$ - $k\bar{a}$, with a plural unhi.

In verbs, we may note the use of the Simple Present in the sense of the Future, thus, $j\bar{a}\hat{i}$, I will go, and $kah\hat{i}$, I will say, instead of $j\bar{a}ib$, kahab. The verb $h\hat{a}w\hat{i}$, I am, becomes haüwā. So also haüwā, you are, and haüwē, it is. These, however, are hardly more than differences of spelling.

The most noteworthy peculiarities occur in the conjugation of the past tense. In Standard Bhojpurī, as in all other dialects and languages of the Eastern Indo-Aryan Group, the characteristic letter of this tense is l. Thus, Bengali dēkhilām, Maithilī dekhilām, Bhojpurī dekhilā, all meaning 'I saw'. In Palamau, however, instead of l the characteristic letter is frequently u. Examples are kaūî, I committed; pahūchuī, I arrived; bujhuī, I understood; takuī, Hooked; dekhuī, I saw; rahuē, he was, they were; bhaūē, it became; gaūē, he went. The following are third persons plural, mostly in the sense of the singular; dihuan, they gave; laguan, they began; uṭhuan, they rose; rahuan, they were; dekhuan, they saw; kahuan, they said; puchhuan, they asked; chahuan, they wished. It will subsequently be seen that this form of the past is also used in Saran.

It should be observed that the past with l is also freely used. Thus, $dih^{a}l_{i}^{a}$, he, honorific, gave, and so on. In the following examples, the plural is used, in most cases, instead of the singular, $chah^{a}lani$, they wished; $kah^{a}lani$, they said; $chal^{a}lani$, they went; $kai^{a}lani$, they did; $lag^{a}lani$, they began; $gai^{a}lani$, they went; $ai^{a}lani$, they came.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

Brother, what can I say? I was so terrified by an imaginary fear that it is impossible for me to describe it. It so happened that yesterday, when we were returning from market along the hill-side, we heard a tiger roaring very loudly above us. As we were a large company, none of us felt any fear. But, to-day, I was going alone along that very road to my uncle's village, and had reached the foot of the hill by the river, when, all at once, I heard a tremendous noise in the forest, which altogether turned my soul out of its senses. I thought to myself that the tiger had come, and had already caught me. I had a sword in my hand, but I had no time to draw it out of its sheath. My heart began to tremble, and I dried up through fear. Although I had not seen the tiger, I became motionless and fascinated by his supposed presence. A little while after, when I looked in that direction, what should I see, but an old Santal, who had been damming up the water which fell from the upper part of the hill, in order to catch fish. He had been throwing down stones from there, and they had come crashing down for scores of cubits. When I saw that, my heart was again filled with courage, and my limbs regained their wonted activity. When I remember this, I keep laughing at my own courageousness.

The dialect of the eastern halt of Ghazipur, both north and south of the Ganges, is practically the same as that of Shahabad. This will be evident from the following version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son. The only special points which require notice are the forms of the Relative Pronoun and of its Correlative, which are jewan and tewan, instead of jawan and tawan respectively. We may also note the third person singular of the Verb Substantive, which is $b\bar{a}i$ instead of $b\bar{a}$. These distinctions do not entitle us to class the language of eastern Ghazipur as a dialect separate from that of Shahabad. Ghazipur is a border district between the Standard Bhojpurī spoken in Ballia and the western form of the dialect spoken in Benares District. In the eastern Parganas of Muhammadabad and Gadha the dialect is the same as that of Ballia, while in the west, in Pargana Mahraich, it is the same as that of Benares District. The total number of speakers of Bhojpurī in Ghazipur is 938,000, of whom half, or 469,000, may be estimated as speaking the Standard, and half as speaking the western Sub-dialect.

Opposite Shahabad, on the north bank of the River Ganges, lies the North-Western Provinces District of Ballia. It is closely connected with the Bhojpur Pargana by many ties, historical and traditional, and the language spoken in it is practically the same as that of Shahabad. This will be manifest from the following specimens, which are in the Dēva-nāgarī-character.

Here and there, we see traces of the form of Bhojpurī which is common over the rest of the north Gangetic area. For instance, while the servant says to the elder brother $r\bar{a}ur$ $bh\bar{a}\bar{i}$ $\bar{a}il$ $b\bar{a}r\bar{e}$ quite correctly after the Shahabad fashion, the father uses the Sāran idiom, $b\bar{a}t\bar{e}$ instead of $b\bar{a}r\bar{e}$ in addressing the elder son.

To-day I see you, Kapil-deo, after a long time. Where have you been so long? I now and then asked about you from your fellow-villagers, but no one gave a clear account. Tell me whether all your family is well.

Brother Jibōdh, what do you ask me! When you know about me, grief will overcome you also, and you will drop tears from your eyes. When I went home from this place, I became entangled myself in agriculture. By day and night I worked at it. There is no one in my family to relieve me for a moment from the toil; for my father's eyes have become useless, and my elder brother went off elsewhere, before I reached home, and has sent no letter since then. My mother and the rest of the family are unhappy because they hear no news from him. My uncle with his wife and children lives separately. For these reasons care and trouble crush me both day and night. Only two days ago I could not go to watch my field in the night on account of a headache. Thieves therefore cut away four bundles from my standing wheat crop. The rent-collector of the Mahārāja has quartered two peons on me to realize the rent, but I have not a cowry to pay them. My maternal uncle also came the day before yesterday and when I asked him for some money he flatly refused. Mine is only an instance of the saying, 'I was beaten at home and went to the jungle. When I got there the jungle took fire.'

The District of Saran lies on the north of the Ganges, opposite the east side of Shahabad, and the west side of Patna. I have already stated, ante, p. 186, that the language of the portion of Saran which borders on the Ganges is Standard Bhojpuri. This statement, however, requires a certain amount of modification.

A reference to the map will show that the language of Muzaffarpur, which lies to the east of Saran, across the river Gandak, is western Maithilī, which, as has been shown, is largely infected with Bhojpurī, and is in fact, a border form of speech between the two dialects. Again, the language of Patna, opposite the south-east corner of Saran, is Magahī. Hence, as might be expected, the language of the east of Saran is tinged with Maithilī peculiarities, and that of the south-east with Magahī ones. To give specimens of all such mixed forms of speech would extend the volumes of the Survey beyond reasonable limits. It must suffice, in the case of Saran, to deal, in detail, with the two main forms of speech, that of the south, and that of the north. For a more minute account of the various forms of speech current in the District, see Notes on the Vernacular Dialects spoken in the District of Saran, by Babu Girīndra-nāth Dutt, in the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Vol. lxvi, 1897, Part I, pp. 194 and ff. It is to this gentleman that I am indebted for the specimens here given, which represent the Standard Bhojpurī spoken in the south of the district, over against Shahabad.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

There was once upon a time a jackal who kept a cow (and lived upon its milk). Then the other jackals, his caste-fellows, asked him, saying, 'O brother, how have you got so fat?' He replied, 'every morning I wash my face. Every day I also chew a mouthful of gravel, and drink a handful of Ganges water. The result is that my teeth have all dropped out.' The other jackals said, 'this fellow has broken our teeth.' Come, let us kill the base one.' They went (to look for him), but could not find him. So the jackals, his caste-fellows, killed the cow.

¹ The jackal is chaffing them. His tribe is notorious for impiety. He pretends that he has got so fat, not by drinking the milk of the cow, but by pious practices. He lives upon the purest food, and as he no longer requires to eat flesh, his teeth have dropped out as useless incombrances. The absence of his teeth he puts forth as an additional proof of his piety.

² Anglice, he has pulled our legs.

NORTHERN STANDARD BHOJPURI.

This form of speech slightly differs from the true Standard Bhojpuri with which we have just been dealing. It may be called the speech of the Doab of the Gandak and the Gogra, omitting the tract of country immediately opposite Shahabad. This Doab includes the Districts of Saran, Gorakhpur and Basti, and the language varies slightly as we go north-west. The language of Central and North Saran, and of a portion of Tahsil Deoria in Gorakhpur, may be considered the model of the south-eastern part of this tract.

It has well-marked peculiarities which deserve notice. As we go further north, into Gorakhpur, we find two distinct sub-dialects, that to the east being commonly known as Gorakhpuri; and that to the west as Sarwariā. The latter extends still further to the west, and covers the whole of the Basti District, being, if we except the Thārū dialects of Gonda and Bahraich, the extreme north-western outpost of Bihārī. The eastern dialect of Gorakhpur, or Gorakhpurī, differs only slightly from that of Central and Northern Saran. All these various forms of speech will be found on the map facing page 1.

The following are the approximate figures for the population speaking the various forms of Northern Standard Bhojpuri:—

	Name of	f Distri	et.					p	opula: Sta	Approximate tion speaking Nor andard Bhojpuri.	thern

							\mathbf{T}_{0}	otal	•	6,165,151

The dialect spoken in Central and North Saran is fully explained in the Bhojpuri Grammar of the present writer. It will suffice to mention a few of the principal points in which it differs from the Standard Bhojpuri of Shahabad.

I.-NOUNS-

The plural is sometimes formed by adding the syllable $s\hat{a}$. Thus $gh\bar{o}r\bar{a}-s\hat{a}$, horses. In Standard Bhojpuri it is more usual to employ this suffix with verbs than with nouns.

II.—PRONOUNS—

Besides ham, I, $ham\bar{e}$ is also used. Besides the standard forms for 'this', Saran has also $ha\bar{\imath}$, genitive $h\bar{e} \cdot kar$, oblique form $h\bar{e}$ or $hek^ar\bar{a}$. Similarly, for 'that', we find $ha\bar{u}$, $ha\bar{u}\bar{e}$, $heuh\bar{e}$, or $\bar{u}h\bar{e}$, with a genitive, $h\bar{o} \cdot kar$, and an oblique form $h\bar{o}$ or $hok^ar\bar{a}$. For 'anyone', we sometimes meet $k\bar{o}\bar{\imath}$, and for the adjective 'what' kauan.

III.—VERBS—

A.—Auxiliary Verbs.

The Verb Substantive $b\bar{a}r\bar{e}$, he is, often takes the form $b\bar{a}t\bar{e}$ in all districts north of the Ganges, though the form $b\bar{a}r\bar{e}$ is also used. We thus get forms like $b\bar{a}t\hat{i}$, or $b\bar{a}n\hat{i}$, I am; $b\bar{a}t\bar{a}$, you are, and so on.

B.—Finite Verbs.

Simple Present.—Optional forms used in Saran are, 2nd Sing., dekhuē, dekhues; 3rd Sing., dēkhuē, dēkhai; 3rd Plur., dēkhen.

Past.—This, as has been remarked in the case of the Palamau specimens, besides having a form whose characteristic letter is l, has also a form whose characteristic letter is u. The following are the optional forms of this tense in use in Saran. 2nd Sing., $dekh^{a}les$, $dekhu\bar{e}$; 3rd Sing., $dekhu\bar{e}$; 1st Plur., $dekhu\bar{i}$; 2nd Plur., $dekhu\bar{a}h$, $dekhu\bar{a}h$; 3rd Plur., $dekhu\bar{a}h$, dekhuan.

The following forms in use in Saran are due to the influence of the Maithili spoken to the east of the Gandak.

1st person,—ham dekh^aliyain. Only used when the object of the verb is in the third person and special respect is shown to it. Thus, ham rājā-kē dekh^aliyain, I saw His Majesty the King.

Ham dekh^eliyáwá. Only used when the object of the verb is in the second person, and special respect is shown to it. Thus, ham raürā-kē dekh^eliyáwá, I saw your Honour.

2nd person, $t\tilde{u}$ de $kh^a lahus$. Only used when contempt is shown to the object in the third person. Thus, $t\tilde{u}$ maliyā-kē de $kh^a lahus$, you saw the wretched gardener.

 $T\tilde{u}$ $dekh^a lahun$. Only used when respect is shown to the object in the third person. Thus, $t\tilde{u}$ $r\tilde{a}j\tilde{a}$ - $k\tilde{e}$ $dekh^a lahun$, you saw His Majesty.

Past Conditional.—2nd Sing., dekhates. 3rd Plur., dekhaten.

Generally speaking, Saran uses the suffixes $h\hat{a}$, $h\bar{a}$, $h\bar{a}$, $h\bar{a}$, $h\bar{a}$, etc., much more freely than Shahabad. They appear in all the Past tenses, and not only in the Perfect and Pluperfect. Thus, the Imperfect may be $ham-d\bar{e}khat \ rah^{o}l\hat{\imath} \ h\tilde{a}$, I was seeing.

The characteristic feature of the Saran dialect is the use of the Past Tense with u, instead of that with l. This peculiarity extends to the Deoria Tahsil of Gorakhpur, but is not met with elsewhere in that district.

The following specimen comes from Deoria; note the frequent use of this u-Past. One or two forms may also be noted which properly belong to the Western Bhojpuri spoken across the Gogra. Such are the Instrumental in an as in $bh\bar{u}khan$, by hunger, and the third person in $a\tilde{i}$, as in $rahua\tilde{i}$, they were. It has not been thought necessary to give an interlinear translation.

GORAKHPURÎ.

Although the preceding specimen comes from the Gorakhpur District, it should not be taken as a sample of its language. It is only spoken in the south-east corner, in a small portion of Tahsīl Deoria, and is really an example of the dialect of the north-west of Saran. As we go north and west from this point, the use of the letter u in the Past Tense of verbs is abandoned, and we find a return to the letter l as in the South Saran and Shahabad. Omitting from consideration this small overflow of dialect from Saran, we find two kinds of Bhojpurī spoken in Gorakhpur, separated by a line running nearly north and south through the centre of the District. To the east of that line, the language is the ordinary Bhojpurī of North-West Bihar, except that the u-form of the Past Tense is not used. To the west of that line, the local dialect is that known elsewhere as Sarwariā which is also spoken in the adjoining District of Basti, and which will be dealt with later on.

As regards the Bhojpuri of the east of the District, it is, to speak more definitely, the language of the two Tahsils of Padrauna and of Deoria and of about two-thirds of the Tahsil of Hata. The language of the rest of the District is Sarwariā. The population figures of the District may be estimated as follows:—

Northern Standard Bhojpuri 1,407,	500 (including about 100,000 speakers of the Saran Dialect.)
Sarwariā 1,569,	307
Eastern Hindi (spoken by middle class Musalmans) 9,	989
Urdū (spoken by educated Musalmans) 6,9
Other languages
TOTAL . 2,994,0

These figures take no account of the secret languages spoken by wandering tribes of Poms and Nats, which have not been separated out in the local return. The languages spoken by Poms and Nats are not of importance, and specimens will be given from other Districts.

AUTHORITIES-

A brief sketch of the local form of Bhojpuri will be found on p. 372 of the District Gazetteer. The language is generally described by Dr. Buchanau Hamilton, in vol. II of Montgomery Martin's Eastern Indian on p. 429.

Two specimens of the dialect spoken in Eastern Gorakhpur are here given. The first is a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son. It is printed in the Kaithf character, and is a facsimile of the writing in current use in the District. A transliteration has also been given, but, after the other translated specimens, it has been considered useless to give an interlinear translation. The second specimen is a piece of folk-lore showing how the jackal outwitted the alligator. It is interesting to note that the incidents closely correspond to the adventures of 'Brer Tarpin' and of 'Brer Rabbit and Brer Wolf' in the Negro stories of Uncle Remus. In this case an interlinear translation as well as a free paraphrase has been given.

As might be expected, there are a few local peculiarities in the dialect. The one which most prominently strikes the eye is the method adopted for writing the broad \acute{a} -sound, which is so marked a feature of Bhojpurī. It is represented by writing the letter a twice. Thus aa. Examples are daa for $d\acute{a}$, laa for $l\acute{a}$, $pahir\~awaa$ for $pahir\~awaa$, and many others. The only other point regarding pronunciation which is worthy of note is that the letter r is preferred to r. Thus we have paral, it fell, instead of paral.

Instead of tek^ara , the oblique form of $s\bar{e}$, he, we find sek^ara . Instead of kachhu, we find kuchh.

As usual in the North-Gangetic Districts, forms like $b\bar{a}t\bar{e}$ and the like are preferred to the southern $b\bar{a}r\bar{e}$, he is. The form with r, is, however, also used. There is a third person plural $b\bar{a}n\tilde{e}$, they are, or, honorifically, he is, which is based on the optional form of the first person, $b\bar{a}n\hat{i}$.

There is a third person plural in \tilde{e} , which has been borrowed from the trans-Gogra $a\tilde{i}$ previously alluded to, see p. 225. Thus, $rah^a l\tilde{e}$, they were. It has a feminine in \tilde{i} , as in $kah^a l\tilde{i}$, she said, used honorifically. It should be noted that, in the second specimen, $n\bar{a}ki$, the word translated 'alligator,' is feminine. Hence the verbs which it governs are in the feminine gender.

Another instance of borrowing from the trans-Gogra dialect is the use of the Instrumental case in an, in bhūkhan, by hunger.

¹ This means 'one could not brook the sight of the other', i.e., each desired the annihilation of the other.
² Lap*tiyāil bāṛá is spoken when one bears a long gradge against another on account of imaginary wrongs. The other sense in which it is used is 'when one lies in wait for the other to do wrong or injury to him.' Here the phrase has been used in the latter sense. The sentence therefore means, 'It is of no avail to you to he in wait for me.'

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

Once upon a time there lived a jackal and a she-alligator in great friendship. Night and day lived they together; neither did he forget her, nor she leave him. In this way they lived for some time, till all of a sudden they quarrelled. So hot became the strife between them, that one could not bear the sight of the other. Said the alligator, 'O jackal, what is the use of your lying in wait for me? Why, my regular meal is twenty people like you.' Said the jackal, 'what are you? I am not afraid of any big animal. Your body may be strong, but it is I who have the brains. Do what you please. I don't ask you to stop. God will take care of me.' So wrangling in this way each went off on his own way. The alligator took to the river, and the jackal to the forest.

Now, on the bank of the river there was a fig-tree, with a root which projected over the stream, partly in the water, and partly out. One day master jackal was sitting on this root having a drink, when the alligator caught sight of him, and with a dive seized hold of his foot. Then said the jackal to himself, 'I' faith, the alligator has got her revenge now. What is the best thing for me to do?' Then he added aloud 'hulloa, alligator, you're a genius, you are. You thought you were going to catch my foot, and you have only caught hold of the root of the tree.' That was enough for the alligator. She let go his foot and grabbed at the root, while the jackal marched away making faces at her. All that she could do was to rub her hands together in disgust at the trick.

So the enmity increased more and more, and one day the alligator set out, and sat down in the jackal's den. When he came home, he perceived her scent, and guessed that she was sitting inside. To make sure, he said, 'well, upon my word. My den alway said ' $g\widetilde{u}$ $g\widetilde{u}$,' and to-day it says nothing at all.' Then the alligator cried out ' $g\widetilde{u}$ $g\widetilde{u}$,' and the jackal knew she was there. Said he, 'so you've taken my den too,' and went off and gave up living in it.

Then he made a home in a heap of dry leaves which had been collected by the Gönds. Here, too, the alligator traced him out, and one day hid herself in the pile to wait for him. When he came home, he found the leaves all upset, and guessed that she was there. Said he, 'I' faith, my heap of leaves always rustled before. Why it is not rustling to-day?' So the alligator made the leaves rustle, and the jackal said to himself, 'all right, now I know what's up. This must be stopped.' So off he ran, and fetched a little fire, with which he lit the pile of leaves, so that the alligator was burnt to ashes.

The moral of this is that brute force is of no avail against mother-wit.

SARWARIĀ.

Sarwariā, properly means the language of the Saruār country, but the name is not quite accurate, for the dialect which it connotes is not spoken over the whole of the Saruār tract, and is, moreover, spoken in parts of the country to which the name Saruār does not properly apply. Sarwariā is, however, a name sanctioned by the Census Report, and is a convenient one. I hence use it with the above explanation.

The word 'Saruār' is a corruption of Sarayū-pāra, or Trans-Sarayū; that is to say, the tract of country on the far side of the Sarayū or Gogrā River, looking from the city of Ajudhiā, the ancient Ayodhyā, near the modern town of Fyzabad. Strictly speaking, it therefore includes the whole of the districts of Bahraich, Gonda, Basti, Gorakhpur, and Saran, but, owing to a local tradition, it now-a-days only means the country on the left bank of the Gogra between Ajudhiā in Fyzabad, and Majhaulī in Gorakhpur. The story runs that when Rāma-chandra returned to Ayōdhyā from his exile the local Brāhmans refused to sacrifice for him, on the ground that he was guilty of killing Rāvaṇa who was himself a member of their caste. He then imported some Brāhmans from Kanauj, who performed the sacrifice, but who were promptly put out of caste for doing so by their brethren. They appealed to Rāma, who stood on the bank of the Gogrā at Ayodhyā, and shot an arrow across the river towards the east. It fell near Majhauli in the south-east of the Gorakhpur District, and he declared that all the land from the Sarayū, i.e., the modern Gogrā, to the place where the arrow fell should belong to these Brahmans and their heirs for ever. Hence arose the wellknown caste of Sarwaria Brahmans, and the country held by them is considered the true Saruar country to the present day.

The Sarwariā sub-dialect of Bhojpurī is spoken all over the district of Basti, and over the western half of Gorakhpur. A glance at the map will show that only a small portion of the Basti district falls within the traditional Saruār tract, while on the other hand, the latter extends, in Gorakhpur, beyond the limits of the Sarwariā sub-dialect, and into the area in which the Northern Bhojpurī of Eastern Gorakhpur is spoken.

The population speaking Sarwariā is estimated as follows:—

Name of District.								Number of persons estimated as speaking Sarwariā.
Basti .	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	-	1,783,844
Gorakhpur			•	•	•	•	•	-	1,569,307
						Ton	AL .		3,353,151

Taking the form of the dialect spoken in Basti, as the most extreme variety, we find that it differs from the Bhojpurī of East Gorakhpur principally in vocabulary. The words for things in common use frequently differ considerably. This will be observed in the two following specimens, and it is not necessary to draw attention to specific instances.

SARWARIĀ. 239

There are also, however, some differences of Grammar. The principal are the following. With them, I shall also mention the points in which the Basti dialect differs from Standard Bhojpurī.

We see the same reluctance to use the cerebral r in Bastī that we observed in Gorakhpur. Thus, we find paral, it fell, used instead of paral. The termination of the genitive is $k\check{a}\check{\imath}$, with an oblique form $k\bar{e}$. This is borrowed from Western Bhojpurī. Thus, $da\check{\imath}u$ -kai, of God, but $b\check{a}p$ - $k\bar{e}$ $lag\tilde{e}$, near the father. As in Gorakhpur, the instrumental singular ends in an, as in $bh\bar{u}khan$, by hunger. Adjectives sometimes change for gender. Thus, we have fasil $achchh\bar{i}$ -hai, the harvest is good.

There are several peculiarities in the declension of pronouns. The oblique form of the genitive always ends in \bar{e} instead of \bar{a} . Thus $ham^ar\bar{e}$ $b\bar{a}p-k\bar{e}$ $ih\bar{a}$, near my father. So, $tuh^ar\bar{e}$, $ok^ar\bar{e}$, $in-k\bar{e}$, $ap^an\bar{e}$; and similarly, $taun\bar{e}$ -s \bar{e} , from this. For the second personal pronoun honorific, instead of $raw\bar{a}$, etc., Sarwariā has $t\bar{a}$, genitive $tuh\bar{a}r$, obl., $tuh\bar{e}$ or $tuh^ar\bar{e}$. The third personal pronoun is \bar{u} , with an oblique form \bar{o} or wah instead of oh. The relative and correlative pronouns are jaun and taun, instead of $j\bar{e}$ and $s\bar{e}$. Their oblique forms are $jaun\bar{e}$ and $taun\bar{e}$. $K\bar{a}w$ is 'what?', kuchh is 'anything', and $kit^an\bar{a}$ is 'how many.' Most of these pronominal peculiarities are also shared in common with Western Bhojpurī.

In verbs, the most noteworthy peculiarity of the Basti dialect is that the third person singular of the Past ends in is instead of in as. Thus, $kah^a lis$, he said; so also, $dih^a lis$, $lih^a lis$, $p\tilde{u}chh^a lis$, $ka\ddot{u}lis$, and others. In one instance, we have the Eastern Hindī $ur\bar{a}is$, he squandered, instead of uraulis. The Respectful Imperative ends in au as in $r\bar{a}khau$. The Past Conditional may be the same in form as the present participle, here, too, following Eastern Hindī. Thus, we have $man\bar{a}it$, for $manait\tilde{a}i$, might have made. The termination of the Conjunctive Participle may be ke, as in $j\bar{a}y-ke$, having gone, or $k\tilde{a}i$, as in $d\bar{e}khi-kai$, having seen. The oblique case of the verbal noun ends in $\tilde{a}i$, instead of in e. Thus, $char\bar{a}w\tilde{a}i-k\tilde{e}i$, for feeding.

It is important to notice that the Potential Passive is formed by adding " $w\bar{a}$ and not \bar{a} to the root of the verb; thus, kah" $w\bar{a}\tilde{i}$, I may be called, instead of the standard Bhojpuri $kah\bar{a}\tilde{i}$.

The form of the Verb Substantive with t is, as usual north of the Ganges, preferred to that with r. Thus, $b\bar{a}t\bar{e}$, he is, and so on.

Of the two following specimens of the Sarwariā of the Basti District, the first is a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, and the second a letter written by one native of the district to another.

The following version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son is in the dialect spoken in South-West Gorakhpur, which forms a portion of the true Saruar tract. It has been made by Pandit Rām-gharīb Chaubē, who is a native of that part of the country. As might be expected, while in the main closely corresponding with the dialect of Basti, it has some points of resemblance with the language of Eastern Gorakhpur. The most striking point of difference from the language of Basti, is that the third person singular of the Past Tense of Transitive verbs, ends in as, as in Standard Bhojpuri, and not in is, as in the dialect of that district. Thus, kahalas, not kahalis, he said. Among minor points, we may notice the occasional use of $r\bar{a}\ddot{u}r$, instead of $tuh\bar{a}r$, for the genitive of the second personal pronoun honorific, the latter being the Sarwaria, and the former, the Standard Bhojpuri form. Instead of un, the usual plural oblique form of the third personal pronoun, we have the slightly different on, while the singular oblique form is ohi. and not wah, as in Basti. The only other point worthy of special note is that the Potential Passive is formed, as in Standard Bhojpuri, by the addition of \bar{a} to the root, and not, as in Basti, by the addition of "wā. Thus, kahāt, not kah" wāt, I may be called.

The specimen is printed in the Deva-nagari character, and a transliteration is given of it.

WESTERN BHOJPURĪ OR PŪRBĪ.

The Bhojpurī spoken in the Districts of Fyzabad, Jaunpur, Azamgarh, and Benares, in the centre of Mirzapur, and the West of Ghazipur differs in many particulars from the Standard Bhojpurī of Shahabad. The most striking point is the abandonment of the oblique form of nouns and pronouns which ends in \tilde{a} , and which is so characteristic of all the dialects of Bihārī, and the substitution of an oblique form in \tilde{e} , such as we meet in Standard Hindī. Western Bhojpurī is, in fact, the most Western outpost of the Eastern group of the Indo-Aryan family of languages, and possesses some of the features of its cousins to its West.

Western Bhojpurī has been admirably and most fully illustrated by Mr. J. R. Reid, and also forms the foundation of Dr. Hoernle's Gaudian Grammar. We thus possess more full information regarding it than we have about any form of the Bihārī language except, perhaps, Maithilī. It is a pity that Mr. Reid's grammar should be buried in a comparatively inaccessible settlement report.

The following is the estimated number of speakers of Western Bhojpuri:-

-	Name of District.								Number of Speakers.

AUTHORITIES-

HOERNLE, A. F. R., C.I.E.,—A Comparative Grammar of the Gaudian Languages. London, 1880. Contains a grammar of Western Bhojpuri, under the name of 'Eastern Hindi.'

Reid, J. R., I.C.S.,—Report on the Settlement Operations in the District of Azamgarh. Allahabad, 1881. Appendix II contains a complete account of the dialect of the District. Appendix III, which has been separately printed, consists of a full Vocabulary of the same.

In Jaunpur and Fyzabad the dialect is spoken only in the extreme east of the District. In the rest of these two districts a form of Eastern Hindī is spoken. Regarding Ghazipur, vide ante, p. 201, and regarding Mirzapur, post, p. 264.

The following are the principal points in which Western Bhojpuri differs from the Standard form of the dialect. For further particulars, the student is referred to Mr. Reid's grammar from which most of these notes are taken.

I.-NOUNS-

The Plural is usually the same as the Singular, the typical termination an, being seldom used.

The postposition for the genitive is ka or $k\tilde{a}i$ (instead of $k\tilde{e}$) with an oblique form $k\tilde{e}$ (instead of $k\tilde{a}$). It may be stated as a general rule that, while in Standard Bhojpuri the oblique form of many nouns and pronouns ends in \tilde{a} , in Western Bhojpuri it ends in \tilde{e} .

Thus-

Standard Bhojpuri -

Kapatī kā maralā-ke kuchhu-o dokh nāhī;

Western Bhojpuri-

Standard Bhojpuri -

Apanā bāp-sē kahalan;

Western Bhojpuri-

Apanē bāp-sē kahalaī, he said to his father.

Standard Bhojpuri-

Oh dēs-kā ēk sahar-kā rahawaiyā-kā pās;

Western Bhojpuri-

Oh dēs-kē ēk sahar-kē $rah^a waiy\bar{a}$ -kē $p\bar{a}s$, near an inhabitant of a city of that country.

Nouns have the usual Locative Singular in \bar{e} , as $ghar\bar{e}$, in a house, and also an Instrumental Singular in an, as $bh\bar{u}khan$, by hunger. Both the long and the redundant form of the noun are frequently used. Thus, $bet^aw\bar{a}$ or $betau\bar{a}$, the son. The redundant form sometimes ends (in the west of the District) in $aun\bar{a}$ or $\bar{\imath}w\bar{a}$. Thus, $ghoraun\bar{a}$, the horse; $pan\bar{\imath}w\bar{a}$, the water. The long and redundant forms usually give the force of the definite article, as above translated. For instance, $\bar{e}k$ $n\bar{o}kar-k\bar{e}$ $bul\bar{a}-ke$, having called a servant; $nokar^aw\bar{a}$ kah^alas , the servant said.

II.—ADJECTIVES—

Adjectives change for gender and case as in Standard Hindī. Thus, barē bēṭē kǎi ghar, the house of the elder son; barī bēṭī, an elder daughter; bīs barē barē ghar, twenty very big houses.

In all the above, the Genitive Singular has a feminine in $\tilde{\imath}$, as $m\tilde{o}r\tilde{\imath}$ $b\tilde{e}t\tilde{\imath}$, my daughter. The oblique form ends in \tilde{e} , as $m\tilde{o}r\tilde{e}$ $b\tilde{a}p-k\tilde{e}$, to my father. As usual, the oblique genitive can be used as a declensional base. Thus $m\tilde{o}r\tilde{e}-k\tilde{e}$, and so on. The oblique form of $ham\tilde{a}r$ is $ham^ar\tilde{e}$, of $tuh\tilde{a}r$, $tuh^ar\tilde{e}$, of $\tilde{e}-kar$, $e-k^ar\tilde{e}$, and so on.

The relative and correlative pronouns have neuter forms, viz., jitthū or jithuā, sitthū or sithuā, titthū or tithuā, which are declined exactly like itthū. The neuter Interrogative Pronoun is kā, kitthū, or kithuā, what? obl., kāhē, kitthū or kithuā. Any one is kew, kehu, or kaunō. Anything is kichh, kichchhū, or kichhaū. In both of these two last, the oblique form is the same as the nominative.

IV.—VERBS—

We find the first person singular much more generally used than in Standard Bhojpuri.

The Verb Substantive is as follows:-

Present, I am, etc.—

			FORM I.		FORM 11.
	8	Sing.	P	Plur. Sing.				Plur.
	Masc.	Fem.	Masc.	Fem.	Masc.	Fem.	Masc.	Fem.

(3)	bā
	$b\bar{a}y$	bāi	bāṭaĩ	bāţ i	hau, hàw	•••••	hauaï	haut, hát

In the first form r may be substituted for t. Thus $b\tilde{a}r\tilde{o}$, and so on throughout. This is principally in the east of the District. Note that, in Western Bhojpurī the first person plural throughout ends in \tilde{i} , not in \tilde{i} .

The Past tense is $rah^a l \hat{\tilde{o}}$, I was, which is conjugated regularly like the past tense of a neuter verb.

The following are the principal tenses of the Finite verb. Only Masculine forms are given. The Feminine forms are formed on the analogy of $b\tilde{a}t\tilde{o}$, above.

(2)	g i r ^a l $ar{e}$	gir*lâ	Pluperfect—giral rah*lō.
(3)	giral (Fem. girali)	gir"la"i, gir"lan

The rest of the Conjugation is as in Standard Bhojpuri, except that the oblique forms of the Verbal nouns are as follows:—

- (1) dēkh, oblique form, dēkhe, or dēkhai.
- (2) dēkhal,— oblique form, dekhalē.
- (3) dēkhab,— oblique form, dekhabāi.

The Perfect sometimes has forms like aïlaĩ-haĩ, he (hon.) has come; kaïlaĩ haĩ, he (hon.) has done.

As regards the irregular verbs they are as in Standard Bhojpuri, except that beside the form $dih^a las$, he gave, I have noted $deh^a las$, as also used. The verb for 'to begin' is lagal, not $l\tilde{a}gal$. 'I will go' is $j\tilde{a}b$.

The two following specimens are in the dialect illustrated in the foregoing grammatical sketch. The only thing to note is the attempt made to represent the peculiar \hat{a} sound by a long \hat{a} . Thus $d\hat{a}$, give, is written $\exists t$ $d\hat{a}$. In transcribing such cases, I shall write \hat{a} not \hat{a} . The specimens are printed in Kaith type. The first is a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, and the second is a statement made by a person accused in a criminal case and recorded in his own language.

They were written in Azamgarh, and may be taken as specimens of the dialect of that District and of Fyzabad. The western boundary of Bhojpuri in the latter district may be taken to be a line drawn from Tanda to the trijunction point of the Districts of Fyzabad, Sultanpur, and Azamgarh.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

I went to the village of Mahuārā to buy a bullock. Then I went on to Khēta-pattī, as I could not find one at Mahuārā. Nor could I find one in Khēta-paṭṭī either. Evening fell when I was at Palthi, on the way home; so I stopped for the night in a shop in the bāzār. I do not know the name of the shopkeeper. As soon as it was morning the people raised a cry that a theft had been committed in the Rāja's palace. Just then I was going home along the road, and three watchmen of the Rājā's came and caught hold of me. They all closed upon me and beat me. I had twenty-two rupees upon me, and they forcibly took from me not only these, but also my body cloth, my waistcoat, and my double-wrapper. I was wearing a loin-cloth, too, and that also they seized by force. They even took my money from me. I was quite alone, and they kicked me and struck me with their clenched fists, and lifted me up and threw me down. My whole body is covered with wounds, so that I cannot stand up. I never fell from the roof. If I had done that I should have fractured my skull.

I started from my village on Thursday last, after borrowing the money from a shopkeeper. No, I did not borrow it from a shopkeeper. I had the money with me in my house, and took it and started. I have three bullocks at home, and had set out to buy one more.

Western Bhojpuri is also spoken by some 80,000 people in the east of the District of Jaunpur, mainly in Taluka Dobhi of Pargana Chandwak. In the rest of the District a form of Eastern Hindi, locally known as Banaudhi, is spoken. The former dialect is practically the same as that of Azamgarh, as will be evident from the following specimen of the Parable of the Prodigal Son. The following peculiarities may be noticed. The broad Bhojpuri \hat{a} is represented in writing by \hat{a} . Thus $dy\hat{a}$ for $dy\hat{a}$, give. The oblique form of the pronoun of the third person is usually written wahi instead of ohi, and, in the conjugation of verbs, the two vowels ai are usually, but not always, written aya. Thus, gayal, bhayal, instead of gail, bhail, etc. These are all mere varieties of spelling. Among verbal forms, we may note $dy\vec{a}$, above mentioned, which is the second person plural Imperative, instead of the more usual da.

The specimen comes from Pargana Chandwak, Tahsil Keraket.

The dialect spoken in the District of Benares is Western Bhojpuri, the same as that of Azamgarh. It is locally known as Banārasī. The following specimens, which I owe to the kindness of Pandit Mahārāj Nārāyan Śivapuri, Rai Bahádur, are admirable examples of the language spoken of the country portions of the district, as distinct from the dialect of the city. The first is a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, for which no interlinear translation is necessary, and the second is the statement made in a criminal court by a man accused of theft.

The only peculiarities which need be noticed are methods of spelling. The peculiar Bhojpuri \hat{a} is represented by visarga, h. Thus \mathbf{z} : $d\hat{a}$; \mathbf{z} : $l\hat{a}$, and many others. The two vowels $a\ddot{i}$ are often spelt $a\ddot{e}$, or aya. Thus $ka\ddot{i}lan$, $ga\ddot{e}l$, bhayal. Similarly $a\ddot{u}$ are usually spelt awa. Thus, instead of $bacha\ddot{u}t$ - \ddot{o} , we have $bachaw^2t$ - \ddot{o} , and instead of $laga\ddot{u}les$, $lagaw^oles$.

The same specimen will also do as an example of the dialect spoken in Western Ghazipur and Central Mirzapur. As already explained on p. 201, we may estimate half the 938,000 speakers of Bhojpurī in the former district as speaking Standard and half as speaking Western Bhojpurī.

As regards Mirzapur, 1,111,500 persons were originally estimated as speaking 'Purbī.' Subsequent enquiry has shown that this is not a correct statement of the case, and that this population must be further sub-divided. Mirzapur District consists of three distinct areas. There is a small portion on the north of the Ganges. There is then the main, central, portion of the District, south of the Ganges and north of the Sone, and finally there is the tract south of the Sone, known as the Sōnpār.

Taking the North-Gangetic area first, it lies immediately to the east of Benares District, and south of that of Jaunpur. It is mainly composed of Pargana Bhadohi, which is a portion of the Family Domains of the Mahārāja of Benares; but in its southeast corner, on the north bank of the Ganges and close to the Benares border, lie the small tracts of Tappa Kon, Taluka Majhwa, and Pargana Karyat Sikhar. In Bhadohi, the language is a form of Eastern Hindī, similar to that which we shall find in Western Jaunpur and Eastern Allahabad. In Kon, Majhwa, and Karyat Sikhar, it is the Western Bhojpurī which is spoken in Benares District. The same form of Bhojpurī is spoken in the portion of Mirzapur which lies between the Ganges and the Sone. In the Sonpar, on the contrary, it appears that the mixed population there settled speak a form of Eastern Hindī, which, for convenience sake may be called Sōnpārī.

Converting the revised local estimates to round numbers, we find the original 1,111,500 speakers of 'Purbī' sub-divided as follows:—

Western Bhojp	ırī	•	•	•			•	•			810,000

Question.—Did you pluck gram from Har-gobind Tiwārī's field on the night between last Monday and Tuesday?

Answer.—My Lord of the Earth, my belly was burning. I did pluck one handful. Question.—Did Ramēsar Görait arrest you on the midnight of the theft, as you were going off with the gram?

Answer.—At sunset I was going home, munching the gram I had plucked. The witness Rām-jiāwan was driving his sugarcane-mill. He asked me where I had taken it from, and I told him that I had taken it from the other side of the village-boundary. He then caught hold of me.

Question.—What did Rām-jiāwan then do?

Answer.—My Lord of the Earth, he had a grudge against me. And so he called the Görait and made me over to him.

Question.—What is the grudge between you and Rām-jiāwan?

Answer.—It is this. He comes and takes grain from my field.

Question.—Have you ever previously been punished for theft?

Answer.—Yes, Sir, I was once imprisoned for fifteen days for theft.

The language spoken by the natives of Benares City varies considerably according to the castes of the speakers. For instance, the use of the word $b\bar{a}t\bar{e}$ for 'he is' is said to be confined to the Kasērās, or brass-workers, instead of which the Baniyā and other Vaiśya castes use hau, while the original inhabitants say $h\bar{a}w\bar{a}$. The city is, of course, largely inhabited by people from other parts of India, who speak corrupted forms of their mother-tongues, Panjābī, Gujarātī, Marāthī, Bengali, or what not. The influence is felt by the native inhabitants, and the true Benares language is every year becoming more and more uniform. The following specimen, which I owe to the kindness of Babu Śyām Sundar Dās, is a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, in the dialect spoken by Kasērās, Ahīrs, and similar castes. I have not thought it worth while to give any analysis of the local peculiarities. Most of them depend on pronunciation, or are mere varieties of spelling. It will be sufficient to draw attention to the representation of the Bhojpurī vowel \hat{a} by the addition of another a, thus $d\hat{a}$, give, is written ΞU

BANĀR^ASĪ. 273

The foregoing specimen may be taken as representing the speech of the middle-classes of the City of Benares. The dialect of the lowest dregs of the populace has many marked peculiarities, and has occupied more than one native scholar. The late Rājā Hariśchandra gives a description of it in his account of the Hindī Language, and a poet, named Tēgh 'Alī, has written a collection of verses in it, which is very popular. Unfortunately, few of them will bear translation. They present a striking instance of the depths to which religious poetry can sink. The book is entitled the Badmāsh-darpan or 'Mirror of Sturdy Rogues,' and gives a curious picture of the habits of these gentry. The poems are religious ones in praise of Krishna, and are couched in the slang, and illustrated with the ideas, of the lewdest of the low. The following is one of the least objectionable. It is really an adoration of the God, but, on the surface, is an address of a city thief to a well-beloved youth.

Two things may be pointed out with regard to the language. One is the mark which means that a final a is very lightly pronounced. Thus $\frac{1}{4}$ is pronounced k^a . The other is the frequency with which the Present Indicative is used in a future sense. Thus $tan\bar{a}i-l\bar{a}$, I will get (a tent) pitched.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

What are gold ashrafis and rupees that I should offer them to thee, when my heart and my life are thine.

At the next Mangal fair will I have an embroidered tent set up for thee on the sand of the banks of the Ganges, O my Prince.

By Rām I swear that I will have made for thee for the next Diwālī festival embroidered shoes, and hat, and cape.

If by good luck any fool of a rich man falls into my clutches, I will take from him a necklace of gold and a rosary of pearls, all for thee.

- 5. For my own breakfast I munch a few grains of parched gram, but for thee I have kept sweetmeats soaked in milk.
- O my Prince, I have told the florist to supply thee regularly with garlands of all kinds of jasmine.

For thee have I ordered Rikhaī, the betel seller, to be always at thy side with betel.

For myself have I bought a blanket, and I have another rough one at home, but for thee, O my Prince, have I purchased a scarlet shawl.

- By Ram I swear that I have found a philosopher's stone in the midst of the Ganges, and now will I get furnished a bungalow of gold for thee.
- 10. Morning and evening saunter thou about with ever varying gait. Lo, I have sent to Kābul for a horse for thee.

My Prince, rub thou otto of roses daily on thy body. Scores of jars of it have I stored for thee in my house.

Well know I that to-day or to-morrow there will be the clash of arms for thee in the streets—the clash of bludgeons and of iron-bound staves, of poniards and stilettos.²

Common people³ get up matches between fighting bulbuls, quails, or amadavats, but I have sent to Kābul for a fighting ram for thee.

By Ram I swear that I will have thee taught wrestling, and make thee a champion athlete, and in my sitting-room will I have dug for thee a wrestling-ground.

15. Tēgh 'Alī, the poet, is ever visiting the sacred shrines of Benares, Allahabad, Dwārikā, Mathurā and Brindāban, for thee, O Krishņa.

A well-known fair held at Benares, entitled the Burk wa Mangal.

The bichhus may be described as a kind of curved stiletto.

³ A duk rahā is a man who is worth only a duk rā, or the fourth part of a pice.

NAGPURIĀ OR SADĀN.

We have seen that on the extreme northern border of the Palamau District the language is Standard Bhojpuri, and that, on the north-east corner of the same district, where it abuts on Gaya, it is Magahi. In the rest of the Palamau District, and over nearly the whole of the Ranchi District, the language of the settled Aryans is a corrupt form of Bhojpuri, which has undergone modifications, partly by the influence of the Magahī dialect which surrounds it on three sides and of the Chattīsgarhī spoken to its west, and partly owing to the influx of words into its vocabulary which belong to the languages of the Non-Aryan population. The same language is spoken in the north and east of the Native State of Jashpur. (In the west of that State, the language is the form of Chattīsgarhī known as Sargujiā, and in the south, Oriyā.) It is generally known as Nagpuriā (strictly transliterated 'Nagapuriā'), or the language of Chota Nagpur proper. It is also known as Sadān or Sadrī (Sadarī), and is called by the Non-Arvan Mundas 'Dikkū Kājī,' or the language of the Dikkū or Arvans. The word 'Sadari' in this part of the country is applied to the language of the settled, as distinct from the unsettled, population. Thus, the corrupt form of Chattisgarhi, which is spoken by the semi-Aryanised Korwas who have abandoned their original Munda language, is known as 'Sadrī Korwā,' as compared with the true Korwā language, belonging to the Munda family, which is still spoken by their wilder brethren.

A reference to what has already been said under the head of Eastern Magahī on pp. 139 and ff. will remind the reader that the Division of Chota Nagpur contains two main plateaux, known, respectively, as the plateau of Hazaribagh, to the north, and the plateau of Ranchi, to the south,—the two being separated by the river-system of the Damuda. The Ranchi plateau includes nearly the whole of the present Ranchi District, and most of the Gurjat States. To the north-west, it gradually shades off into the lowlands of Palamau, while on the east and south it drops more abruptly into the plain countries of Manbhum and Singhbhum. On the east, a small portion of the sub-plateau tract belongs politically to the District of Ranchi, and here the language is not Nagpuriā, but is the form of Magahī known as Pāch Parganiā. Again, across the south-east corner of Ranchi, a colony of Jains speak the variety of Western Bengali known as Sarākī, while the other Aryan inhabitants of the same tract speak either Nagpuriā or Pāch Parganiā according to the locality. Finally, on the north of the District, a colony of some 20,000 immigrants from Hazaribagh still speak the language of their mother-country, in the midst of a Nagpuriā population.

						SPOKEN BY THE UNDERMENTIONED POPULATION IN

			To	ral .		1,128,885	596,770	113,636	1,839,291

It will be seen from the above that Nagpuriā is spoken by, altogether, 594,257 people. It is bounded on the north-west by the Standard Bhojpuri of North Palamau. on the north-east and north by the Magahi of Hazaribagh, on the east by the languages of the sub-plateau population of Eastern Ranchi speaking the Pach Pargania variety of Magahī, and of the mixed population of Manbhum, some of whom speak Kurmālī Magahī, and others Western Bengali. On the south it is bordered by the Chakradharpur Thana, and by the two Native States, of Singhbhum, the main language of which is Oriya, but in which a portion of the population speaks Magahi. Further to the west, the southern boundary is the northern frontier of the Gangpur State till it meets Jashpur, which State the language-pale crosses up to its western frontier. South of this line the language is here Oriya without any admixture of Magahi. At the western boundary of Jashpur, the line turns north across the State, and then continues in the direction of the common frontier of Sarguja and Palamau up to the river Sone. East of this line, the language is Nagpuria, and west of it the Sargujia form of Chattisgarhi. The above boundary line will be clearly seen on the map facing p. 1.

Nagpuriā has the advantage of having been well illustrated by the Reverend E. H. Whitley. In order to understand the title of his Grammar, it is necessary to explain that the old District of Lohardaga originally included Palamau. The latter district was separated off, and the remaining portion retained the name of Lohardaga. Finally, in the year 1899, the name of the newly formed District of Lohardaga was changed to that of Ranchi.

NAGPURIĀ SKELETON GRAMMAR.

• I.—PRONUNCIATION.—A final i is pronounced, and written in the preceding syllable. Thus suvari, a pig, becomes suwair. This peculiarity runs right through the language. The influence of the neighbouring Bengali leads the letter a to be sometimes pronounced as \bar{o} or o Thus sab, all, becomes sob or sob.

II.—NOUNS.—Nouns do not change in the singular. The plural is formed by adding man,—a termination borrowed from Chhattisgarhi.

The plural termination is seldom used, except in the case of animate nouns.

The cases are formed by the following postpositions,— $k\bar{e}$, to (also forms Accusative); k, $k\bar{e}r$, or kar, of; $m\bar{e}$, in; le, $l\check{a}\check{i}$, lagin, $lug\bar{e}$, for; $s\bar{e}$, from.

There is an Instrumental in \bar{e} . Thus $bhukh\bar{e}$, by hunger.

To give the idea of definiteness, the Chhattisgarhi suffix har is sometimes added to nouns. Thus betra-har, the son.

III.-PRONOUNS.

		I.		Thou.			1	1
	Inferior. Superior. Inferior. Superior.		Superior.	Your Honour.	This.	That, he	Who.	That.	Whof	What?

'Any one,' 'some one 'is koi or keu. It is thus declined-

	Sing.	Plur.
Nom.	koī, keū	koī koī, or koī koī-man.
Acc.	$kar{e}khar{b}$.	koī koī-kē.
Gen.	kek " $r\bar{o}$	kek ro kek ro, or koi koi kēr.
Loc.	kek ^a rō-mề	kek*rō kek*rō-mĒ
;	and so on.	and so on.

Except in the case of the Accusative of all the above, and in the case of $r\bar{a}ure$ or ap^ane , the postpositions forming cases are added, in the singular, to the Genitive. Thus, $m\bar{o}r \cdot m\bar{e}$, in me. $R\bar{a}ure$ or ap^ane forms the other cases of the singular like the accusative. Thus $r\bar{a}ur \cdot m\bar{e}$ or $ap^ane \cdot m\bar{e}$. In the plural, all postpositions are added to the Nominative form. Note that $r\bar{a}ure$ always governs the verb in the first person plural.

Pronominal Adjectives are jaun, taun, kaun, as in Standard Bhojpuri.

'Anything' is kōnō which does not change in declension, except that the Plural is kōnō kōnō; kuchh (obl. kuchhō) also occurs. The Indefinite Pronominal Adjective is kōnō any.

Adjective is $k\bar{v}n\bar{v}_0$, any.

The Reflexive Pronoun is apan; Acc. apan- $k\bar{e}$ or apene- $k\bar{e}$, and so throughout.

IV.-VERBS.

A.-Auxiliary Verbs and Verbs Substantive.

	Present, I am.	Past, I	was
Sing.	Plur.	Sing.	Plur.
1. aho, ho, or hau,	ahī or haī	rahõ	rahî or rah*lî
2. ahaïs, haïs or his	$ahar{a} ext{ or } har{a}$	rahis	rahā or rah ^e lā
3. ahē or hai	ahaī or haī	rahē or rah*lak	rahai or rahilai

The following form of the Present is borrowed from Magahi:-

Sing.	Plur.
1. hek 🖥	hekī
2. hekis	$hekar{a}$
3. $hekar{e}$	hekaï

Ahan and han are used as copulas, as in 'the water is hot', when the predicate is an adjective. Heko is used when the predicate is a substantive, as in 'this is water.'

NAGPURIA SKELETON GRAMMAR.

B.-Finite Verb.

Infinitive, $d\bar{e}khek$, to see (dative); of seeing (genitive);

Verbal Nouns, dēikh, Obl. dēkhe; dēkhal, Obl. dekhal, the act of seeing.

Present Participle, dekhat, seeing.

Past Participle, dēkhal, seen.

The Present Conditional is the same as the Future, except that the 3rd person is often, singular, $d\bar{e}kh\bar{o}k$; plural, $d\bar{e}kh\bar{o}$. The Tense, which in other dialects is used for the Present Conditional, is used, in Nagpuria, as an optional form of the Perfect.

Present, I see, etc.

Past, I saw, etc.

 ${\it Imperative}.$

	Sing. Plur.		Sing.	Plur.	Sing.	Plur.
1.	dēkhō-nā	dēkhi-lā	dekh*l*î	dekh*lī	2. dēkh, dekh*bē	dēkhā, dekh*bā

Future, I shall see, etc.

Past Conditional, (if) I had seen.

	Sing.	Plur.	Sing.	Plur.
1. 2.	dekh°bē	dēkhab, dekh*bai dekh*bā	dekh*tö dekh*tis	dekh ^e tī dekh ^e tā	The Definite Paragrams of the May. Thus dekhad Imperfect, dekhad The Present is u
3.	dēkhī, dekh°tai	dekh ^a baī	dekh"tak	dekh*taï	or dekhatth 5, I an

Present is formed in the usual hat.ho. I am seeing. So also the at-raho, I was seeing.

m seeing.

In the above, dekhatai and dekhabai are borrowed from Magahī.

The Perfect, I have seen, has two forms, as follows:-

Sing.	Plur.	Sing,	Plur.
1. dekh*ใช้-ค่ชี้	dekh*lī-haī	dēkhoื	dēkhī
2. dekh*lē-haïs	dekh*lā-hā	$d\bar{e}khis$	$d\bar{e}kh\bar{a}$
3. dekh*lak-hai	dekh°la%-ha%	$dar{e}khar{e}$	dēkhaĩ

It will be seen that the first form is only the Past Tense, with the Present Tense of the Auxiliary suffixed. This principle of formation is borrowed from Magahi. The second form is the tense which in other dialects is the Present Conditional, and represents the old Sanskrit Present Indicative.

The Pluperfect, I had seen, is formed as follows:-

	Sing.	Plural.
1	dêkh rahỗ	dēkh rahī
2	$dar{e}kh$ rahis	dēkh rahā
3	$dar{e}kh$ $rahar{e}$	dēkh rahaī

Causals and Passives are formed as usual: thus, dekhāek, to cause to see, dekhawāek, to cause to cause to see; dēkhal jāek, to be seen. The only irregular verbs noted are hoek, to be; Present Participle, hoat or bhewat; Past Participle, hoal or bhel: jaek, to go; Past Participle. $g\bar{e}l:d\bar{e}wek$, to give; Present Participle, $d\bar{e}t$ or $d\bar{e}wat$; Past Participle, $d\bar{e}l$ or $d\bar{e}wal$.

Note that the Conjunctive participle is deikh or deikh-ke. Comparison with other Bihari dialects shows that the original form was dekhi. but the final i is epenthetically pronounced in the preceding syllable. This i sometimes affects a preceding a, so that it is pronounced something like \bar{o} . Thus $m\bar{a}ir$, having struck, is pronounced, and sometimes written, $m\bar{o}ir$.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

B comes to see A, whose paddy has been fraudulently cut.

- A. Sit down. Why have you come?
- B. I came here, brother, when I heard of your law-suit, that I might learn what has really happened.
- A. O Brother, what can I say? So outrageous has the World become! Well, see now, I ploughed, I dug, I sowed, and then came Budhu and reaped my ripe paddy by force.
 - B. Where were you then, that he should come in this way and reap by force?
- A. O Brother, what can I say? On that day of all days, I had gone to market to buy lac.
 - B. And was there no one in your house at the time?
- A. Well, the children were there; but what could they do? You see, Budhu had come with ten young fellows armed with bludgeons and fifteen hired servants. I got the news the same afternoon in the market?
- B. Well then, what do you think you should do? Are you going to grin and bear it, or are you going to take any active measures?

290 BIHĀRĪ.

A. Yes, indeed, brother. I am not going to let them slip. I am off to Ranchi to file a petition against them, and will have them summoned. Then, while Budhu is away there, I'll have his paddy crop reaped in my turn.

B. That's a very good idea. I'll give you a helping hand. You just stay in Ranchi, and I'll bide here and have the paddy cut.

A. Good!

The following two specimens have been translated by Babu Manmatha-nath Chatterji, Manager of the Jashpur State, and are examples of the language of the 46,672 people inhabiting the eastern portion of that territory. In the western portion the language is the Sargujiā form of Chattīsgaṛhī, and hence it will be found that the specimens now given present more signs of the influence of that language than do the specimens from Ranchi. The most prominent peculiarity which is borrowed from Chhattīsgaṛhī is the use of the suffix har which is added to a noun to give the force of the definite article. Thus bēṭā, a son, but bēṭā-har, the son. In the second specimen, there occurs the curious form kah²thēik, he says, which seems to be a corruption of the Magahī kahat-hakaï.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

There was once upon a time a city which had a king. On a mountain near by there dwelt a tiger who used to catch and eat the citizens. So the king got up a hunting-drive, and the tiger started off in flight. On his way he met a travelling grain-merchant trudging along with his loaded bullock.

Said the tiger, 'Brother, save me.'

Said the merchant, 'how can I do that?'

'Put me into one of your bags, and tie me on the bullock's back, like a load of grain.'

So the merchant loaded up the tiger on to the bullock's back as he had suggested. When they had gone on a couple of miles the tiger asked to be let out, and the merchant released him. Then, after his own wild-heast nature, said the tiger, 'now, merchant, I am going to kill and eat you.'

Said the other, 'Why should you do that? It is I who have saved your life.'

But the tiger would not listen to his prayers, and said, 'I am certainly going to seize you. Come now, choose whether I shall eat you or your bullock.'

The merchant asked that the matter should be decided by an arbitrator. 'The fig-tree,' said he, 'is a God. If he says that you are to eat me, well and good.' So they went under a fig-tree. 'O divine Fig-tree,' said the merchant, 'can evil be done in return for good?'

- 'Certainly,' said the fig-tree, 'I live high up in the sky, and men come and rest under my shade. Then when they are going away, they cut down my branches, and pluck off my leaves.'
- 'Now,' says the tiger, 'shall I eat you or your bullock?' But the merchant replied, 'Come, the cow is a Brāhman. If she says you are to eat me, well and good.' So they went on and found an old cow sunk in the mire, and went up to her. 'O Mother Cow,' said the merchant, 'can evil be done in return for good?'
 - 'Certainly,' said the cow.

Note.—The story, as given above, abruptly ends here. The tale is an old one, and is current all over Northern India. The cow explains that she benefits mankind by her various products, and that in return her owner beats her, and, when she is old, turns her out to die. Then the merchant appeals to the road. The road replies that he makes travelling easy and in return men trample on him, and crush him under cartwheels. Finally the man appeals to a jackal. The latter pretends to be very stupid, and to be unable to understand what has happened. Finally he refuses to believe that the tiger could ever have got into the sack. The tiger gets in to show how it was done, and then the merchant ties him up in it, and goes his way rejoicing.

MADHEST.

Going to the east from the District of Gorakhpur, and crossing the river Gandak, we find ourselves in the District of Champaran. This District is to the north of, and separated by, the same river from Saran, with which it has historical and political connections. On the other hand, it forms part of the ancient country of Mithila. The language spoken in it illustrates this state of affairs. Although it is based in the main on the same stock as that of the Bhojpuri spoken in Saran and East Gorakhpur, it has some peculiarities borrowed from the Maithili spoken in the neighbouring District of Muzaffarpur. These will be pointed out in the proper place. The Maithili influence is strongest in the east of the District on the Muzaffarpur border, where Maithili, and not Bhojpuri, is spoken in a strip of land about two miles wide, and eighteen miles long in Phākā Thānā. As we go west, the influence decreases, till, on the banks of the Gandak, the language is the same as that spoken in North-east Saran, and in Eastern Gorakhpur. This dialect is locally known as Madhēsī, a word formed from the Sanskrit Madhya-dēśa, meaning 'midland,' an appropriate name enough for the language of the country situated between the Maithili-speaking country of Tirhut, and the Bhojpuri-speaking country of Gorakhpur. Some of the people actually name the form which the dialect takes in the western part of the District 'Gorakhpuri,' but such minute distinctions are not necessary, and, excepting the small strip in which Maithilī is spoken, it is sufficiently accurate to say that the language spoken over the whole of Champaran is Madhesi.

The figures originally supplied by the local authorities for Champaran, so far as regards Bihārī dialects, were as follows:—

											To	TAL		1,754,836
Domrā.			•	•	•							•		4,000
Maithili .	•	•	•	•			•	•		•	•	•		28,800
Görakhpur	î				•	•		•	•					36,000
Madhēsī	•	•	•			•		•			•		•	1,686,03 6

Subsequent enquiries show that, under the head of Görakhpuri, were erroneously included some, 8,000 Tikulīhārs, who spoke a form of Eastern Hindī. These will have to be discussed under the head of that language.

On the other hand, the Thārūs of Champaran, who were erroneously shown as speaking a Tibeto-Burman Language, really speak, like their brethren of Bahraich and Gonda, a corrupt form of Bhojpurī. No doubt, the Thārūs of Gorakhpur and Basti do the same, but no information on the subject is available. Farther west, beyond the Gogra, in the District of Kheri, they speak a corrupt form of the local dialect of Eastern Hindī.

After combining the figures for Madhësi and Görakhpuri, and making the above corrections, we arrive at the following revised figures for the dialects of Bihārī spoken in Champaran:—

											TOTAL		•	1,774,456

MADHESĪ. 301

Of the above, Maithilī has been already dealt with, vide p. 107 ante. Domṛā and Thārū will be dealt with in their proper places. I now proceed to give specimens of Madhēsī.¹

The first specimen is a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, and the second is a folk-tale. Both are given in the Kaithī character, in facsimile of the original manuscript. They are excellent specimens of the current style of Kaithī writing which obtains in Champaran. They are each accompanied by a transliteration and an interlinear translation. Among the peculiarities to be noted are the following.

The dialect shares with Maithilī a dislike to the cerebral r, frequently substituting the dental r for it. Thus, we find paral, instead of paral, it fell: $bar^ak\bar{a}$, for $bar^ak\bar{a}$, great: $b\bar{a}r\hat{a}$, for $b\bar{a}r\hat{a}$, you are; $korhi\bar{a}$, for $korhi\bar{a}$, a leper. We have noticed the same peculiarity in Gorakhpur and Basti.

The Maithili form ok ni, current in Muzaffarpur, is used for 'to them.'

For the auxiliary verb, we have both $b\bar{a}r\hat{a}$, you are, and $b\bar{a}t\bar{e}$, he is. In the Finite verb, note the form $kh\bar{a}s$, they used to eat. The third person singular of the Past tense of transitive verbs regularly ends in ak, as in Maithili. Thus, we have kah^slak , he said; $d\bar{e}lak$, he gave, and many others. The word for 'he came,' is the Maithili $\bar{a}el$, not the Bhojpuri $\bar{a}il$. So also, the Maithili $kahal^ska^s$, she said.

Once upon a time there was a king who had seven daughters. One day he called the whole seven and asked them by whose good fortune they got their food to eat. Then six of them replied, 'it is by thy good fortune that we eat our food,' whereat the king was much pleased. Then said he to his youngest daughter, 'thou hast not spoken.' She answered, 'I get my food by my own good fortune.' Thereon the king was mightily enraged against her, and married her to a leper, and banished the two into the forest. The poor Princess sat in the forest weeping with the leper's head in her lap, and so piteous were her tears that the birds of the forest all wept with her. It happened that just then the god Siva and his wife Pārvatī were passing by, and Pārvatī said to Siva, 'until thou remove the grief of this poor girl, I will not leave this place.' So Siva said to the Princess, 'my daughter, shut thine eyes.' She did so, and when she 'opened them, lo-and-behold, the leper had become as beautiful as gold. So she uttered praises to the god, and both lived happy ever after; for pain and poverty had fled from them.

THE THARU BROKEN DIALECTS.

The Thārūs are an aboriginal tribe who inhabit the Sub-Himalayan-Tarāī, from Jalpaiguri on the east, to the Kumaun Bhābar on the west. Regarding the origin of this tribe much has been written by many authors from Dr. Buchanan-Hamilton's time to the present day. It will here suffice to refer the reader to Mr. Nesfield's article in the Calcutta Review for January 1885, and to the articles in Mr. Risley's Tribes and Castes of Bengal, and Mr. Crooke's Tribes and Castes of the North-Western Provinces and Oudh, in which all that has been said by previous writers has been summed up. Mr. Crooke, the latest authority on the subject, says, 'The most probable explanation based on the available evidence seems to be that the Thārūs are originally a Dravidian race who, by alliances with Nepalese and other hill races, have acquired some degree of Mongolian physiognomy.'

Whatever doubts may exist concerning the origin of this curious race, there can be no doubt that the languages spoken by those members of the tribe who are accessible to students in India are Aryan. There is, however, no such thing as a Thārū language. Everywhere the Thārūs speak, more or less correctly, the language of the Aryan races with whom they are immediately in contact. For instance the Thārūs of the north of Purnea appear to speak a corrupt form of the Eastern Maithilī spoken in that District,² those of Champaran and Gorakhpur, a corrupt Bhojpurī, and those of the Naini Tal Tarāī the ordinary Western Hindī of the locality.

The following are the figures for the Tharu population of British India, according to the Census of 1891:

No estimate can be made of the number of Thārūs in the Tarāī outside British India.

The figures returned for the Survey as the number of persons speaking what was reported to be the 'Thārū Language,' a thing which does not really exist, were as follows:

This list, as compared with the preceding one, presents both deficiencies and an instance of redundance. With regard to the former, it is easily intelligible that where the Tharus have adopted the language of their Aryan neighbours, there was nothing to induce the local authorities to show them as speaking a separate language. This accounts for the absence from the second list of the names of the Districts of Bogra, Darjeeling, Jalpaiguri, Darbhanga, Muzaffarpur, and Saran in Bengai. As to the United Provinces, subsequent inquiries have shown that this is certainly the case in the District of Pilihhit and in the Naini Tal Tarāī. It also appears that the Tharus of Kheri speak the ordinary Awadhi of that district, although they were originally returned as speaking a separate language. In Bahraich, on the contrary, they speak a corrupted form of the Bhojpuri spoken to the east. No 'Tharu Language' was returned from Gorakhpur, but, here, there is no doubt that the 3,072 Tharus of that district, speak a corrupt form of the Bhojpuri locally spoken, and differing considerably from it, though closely resembling the Tharu Bhojpuri of Champaran. I have no doubt that the same is the case with the 208 Tharus of Basti, whose number was evidently too insignificant for the local authorities to return as speaking a separate dialect; for the members of the trihe who inhabit Gonda, the district immediately to the west of Basti, do speak a corrupt Bhojpuri. Returning to the Lower Provinces, the language of the large number of Tharus who inhabit the north of Champaran is a corrupt form of the local Bhojpuri. As to Purnea, the local authorities have reported that the 'Tharu Language' is spoken by 3,300 people in that district, although, according to the Census, it does not contain a single member of the tribe. Here the Census is probably wrong, and the local authorities are probably right. Unfortunately, the Purnea Tharus are a particularly wild section of their tribe, and every effort which has been made to obtain specimens of their language has proved unavailing. So far as I can ascertain it is there a corrupt form of the local Eastern Maithili, and as such it has been dealt with on pp. 86 and ff.

In other districts the presence of Thārūs is more or less of an accident. The Districts of Darbhanga and Muzaffarpur do not, as is the case with Champaran and its districts to the west, run up into the Nepal Tarāī, and the few Thārūs found there at the time of the Census have become absorbed, so far as language goes, into the rest of the population. When I served in the former district, more than twenty years ago, I met several of these men, and though they had traditions and customs of their own, their language was even then the Maithilī of the lower orders of the country. So also, in Jalpaiguri, their language is the Bengali of the Aryan population of the district.

We may tabulate these results, so far as they concern the British districts adjoining the Himalayan Tarāī as follows, dividing the language spoken by Thārūs into three groups, according as it is the same as that of the surrounding population, or is a corrupted form of it. In the latter case, we must, for the sake of accuracy in statistics, and to avoid quoting the same men twice over, show separately when the corrupted form of the local language has been separately reported by the local officials or not.

This total differs from the Grand Total given on page 312 by about 5,000. The difference is due, partly to the inclusion of the Purnea figures, and partly to the fact that the figures reported from Kheri, Gonda, and Bahraich differ from those of the Census.

GRAND TOTAL OF ALL THARUS

Omitting from consideration the figures in the first column commencing from those for Muzaffarpur, all of which are accidental, it will be observed that broadly speaking, so far as language goes, the Thārūs of the Western Tarāī have amalgamated much more completely with the rest of the population than those more to the east. There is another point to notice, which is not clearly brought out in the above table.

The language spoken by the Thārūs is not always the same as, or a corruption of the language of the people among whom they live, but is, in some instances, the language of a neighbouring district. Thus, we shall see that the language of the District of Kherī is on the main a form of Eastern Hindī, though it shows signs of shading off into the neighbouring Western Hindī, spoken in Shahjahanpur. But the language spoken by the Thārūs of Kheri is not this form of speech, but closely resembles the Western Hindī spoken in Pilibhit and the Naini Tal Tarāī. Similarly, the Thārūs of Bahraich and Gonda do not talk the Eastern Hindī of those districts, but speak a corrupt form of the Bhojpurī spoken in the neighbouring District of Basti. In fact, so far as I can gather from the specimens of their language, none of the frontier Thārūs speak any form of Eastern Hindī. They either speak the Western language of the Naini Tal Tarāī, or else Bhojpurī or Maithilī.

A vocabulary of the Thārū dialect will be found in Hodgson's Essay entitled Continuation of the Comparative Vocabulary of the Languages of the broken Tribes of Nēpāl, in the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Vol. xxvi, 1857, pp. 317 and ff., which has been reprinted in his Miscellaneous Essays relating to Indian Subjects, Vol. i, sec. ii, pt. 2, London, 1880. Judging from the forms of the verb given by him, the particular dialect of Thārū there exemplified is a corrupt Bhojpurī.

With regard to the Thārūs of Purnea, see pp. 86 and ff. The language spoken by the Thārūs of Kheri and the districts to the west will be dealt with in their proper place. Here, I propose to give specimens of the corrupt Bhojpurī spoken by the Thārūs of Champaran, Gorakhpur, Basti, Gonda, and Bahraich.

The following specimens, for which I am indebted to Pandit Rama-ballabh Misra, Assistant Settlement Officer of Champaran, come from that district, and may be taken as examples of the language spoken by the Thārūs of the north of Champaran and Gorakhpur. As the Thārūs have no written character, the specimens are given in the Roman character only.

There was a herdsman tending his bullocks. The farm-labourers' were transplanting paddy. There was a deer crouching down. The herdsman said to the labourers what is that before you?' They replied, 'Who cares what is before us, and what is not? Go and see for yourself.' However, they went to see what it was and the herdsman killed the deer. Then said the labourers, 'O foul-one, why have you killed it? It had taken refuge with us. We shall tell the headman, and he will punish you. A great shame has fallen on you.'

The two following specimens of Thārū Bhojpurī come from the District of Gonda, and may be taken as specimens of the Thārū language of that District, as well as of that of the adjoining District of Basti. They are admirably idiomatic versions, and well illustrate the peculiar idioms of the tribe. The first is a translation of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, and the second a little song.

Singh king.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

Rāma and Lakshmaṇa went forth to hunt. On Belwat, the she-elephant, was placed the riding-seat, but (excited by the chase) the elephant ran away, and the howdah and all its fittings fell from her back.

Rāma felt thirsty. 'O sister,' said he, 'thou who drawest water from the well, give me one drop of water, sister, to drink.' A gugglet of gold, with a silver spout, did she bring, all full of Ganges water. (Then said she to herself), 'if the divine Rāma had asked my caste, I should have told him that my father was Rājā Śatal Singh.'

The last specimen of the Thārū dialect comes from the District of Bahraich. Here and there, words such as rahis and kahis show the influence of the Eastern Hindī spoken by the other inhabitants of the district, but in the main the language is Bhojpurī.

STANDARD LIST OF BIHART WORDS AND SENTENCES.

These lists have been prepared independently of the translations of the Parable of the Prodigal Son in the corresponding dialects. Variations of spelling will, therefore, be observed. These have been deliberately left untouched, as they illustrate the pronunciation in doubtful cases.

Oriyā is the language of Orissa proper, and of the surrounding country. The area over which it is spoken is, roughly speaking, 82,000 square miles, and the number of people who speak it is, in round numbers, nine millions.

It is called Oṛiyā, Oḍrī, or Utkalī, that is to say the language of Oḍra or Utkala, both of which are ancient names of the country now known as Orissa. It is sometimes incorrectly called Uriya by Europeans, but this name is merely a misspelling of the more correct 'Oṛiyā.'. The earliest example of the language which is at present known consists of some Oṛiyā words in an inscription of king Narasimha Dēva II, dated 1296 A.D. An inscription of Narasimha Dēva IV, dated 1395 A.D., contains several Oṛiyā sentences, which show that the language was then fully developed, and was little different from the modern form of speech either in spelling or in grammar.

The Orissa country is not confined to the Division which now bears that name. It includes a portion of the district of Midnapore in the north, which, together with part of Balasore, was the 'Orissa' of the phrase 'Bengal, Bihar, and Orissa,' met in the regulations framed by the Government in the last decades of the 18th century. Oriyā is also the language of most of the district of Singhbhum, belonging to the Division of Chota Nagpur, and of several neighbouring Native States which fall politically within the same division. On the west it is the language of the greater part of the district of Sambalpur and of a small portion of the district of Raipur in the Central Provinces, and also of the number of Native States which lie between these districts and Orissa proper. On the south, it is the language of the north of the Madras district of Ganjam, with its connected Native States, and of the Jeypore Agency of Vizagapatam. It is thus spoken in three Governments of British India, viz., in the Lower Provinces of Bengal, in the Central Provinces, and in the Madras Presidency.

On the east Oriya is bounded by the Bay of Bengal. On the north, its boundary, to the east, coincides with the River Haldi, which here Political Boundaries. forms at the same time the northern boundary of the Contai sub-division of Midnapore. It then turns north-west along the river Kalighai, as far as the district of Bankura, so as to include in the Oriya-speaking area the four Midnapore police circles of Dantan, Gopiballabhpur, Jhargaon, and Binpur. It next turns back along the eastern boundary of the Singhbhum district, leaving the side of that district which is known as Dhalbhum in possession of Bengali. Thereafter it follows the common boundary of Singhbhum and the Native State of Mayurbhanja as far as the State of Sarai Kala, where it again turns north and crosses the Singhbhum district up to its northern boundary, being stopped by the elevated plateau of Ranchi. It skirts this plateau along the southern boundary of Ranchi district till it meets the State of Jashpur, which it crosses so as to include the southern portion of that State in the Oriyā area. It thence turns south, along the boundary between that State and the State of Udaipur, across the States of Raigarh and Sarangarh and the districts of Sambalpur and Raipur, and along the boundary between the Jeypore Agency of Vizagapatam and the State of Bastar to near Tindiki, where it turns east, across Vizagapatam and Ganjam, and joins the sea coast near Barwa, a small port in the latter district.

Oriyā is bounded on the north by Bengali and, where the political boundary runs along the south of the Ranchi Plateau, by the form of Bihārī spoken in that district. On the west it is bounded by Chhattīsgarhī, and on the south by Telugu.

Oriyā is not the only vernacular spoken in the above area. It is the only Aryan one, but over the whole tract, except the settled portions of Orissa, there are a number of tribes who know no Oriyā, and whose only form of speech is some Dravidian or Muṇḍā language. Of these, the speakers of Kandhī are probably the most numerous.

Oriya, with Bengali, Bihaii, and Assamese, forms one of the four speeches which together make up the Eastern Group of the Indo-Aryan Place of Oriva in reference to other Indo-Aryan languages. languages. Its grammatical construction closely resembles that of Bengali. It has the same weak sense of number, and, as in Bengali, when the plural has to be signified, it must be done with the aid of In the case of living rational beings, this noun of multitude some noun of multitude. is the word mane, which is said to mean literally 'men.' In the case of other nouns it is usually some word meaning 'all.' In the verb, as is also the case in Bengali, the singular of the first and second persons are only used by the uneducated, or when respect is not intended. It has one great advantage over Bengali in the fact that, as a rule, it is pronounced as it is spelt. There are few of those slurred consonants and broken vowels which make Bengali so difficult to the foreigner. Each letter in each w ord is clearly sounded, and it has been well described as 'comprehensive and poetical, with a pleasant sounding and musical intonation, and by no means difficult to acquire and master.' The Oriya verbal system is at once simple and complete. It has a long array of tenses, but the whole is so logically arranged, and built on so regular a model. that its principles are easily impressed upon the memory. It is particularly noticeable for the very complete set of verbal nouns, present, past, and future, which take the place of the incomplete series of infinitive and gerund which we meet in Bengali, and for want of which that language is sometimes driven to strange straits in order to express the simplest idea. When Bengali wishes to express the idea embodied in what in Latin would be called the Infinitive, it has to borrow the present participle for the occasion, and then has to use it for all tenses, so that the word is used, in the first place, not as a participle, and, in the second place, often not in the present tense. Oriya, on the other hand, simply takes the appropriate Verbal Noun, and declines it in the case which the meaning necessarily requires. As every Infinitive must be some oblique case of a Verbal Noun, it follows that Oriya grammar does not know the so-called 'Infinitivemood 'at all. The veriest beginner does not miss it, and instinctively makes up his 'Infinitive' or his 'Gerund' as he requires it. In this respect Oriva is in an older stage of grammatical development than even Classical Sanskrit, and, among Indo-Aryan Languagcs, can only be compared with the ancient Sanskrit spoken in Vedic times. This archaic character, both of form and vocabulary, runs through the whole language, and is no doubt accounted for by geographical position. Orissa has ever been an isolated country bounded on the east by the ocean, and on the west by the hilly tracts, inhabited by wild aboriginal tribes and bearing an evil reputation for air and water. On the south, the language is Dravidian, and belongs to an altogether different family, while, on the north, it has seldom had political ties with Bengal.

On the other hand, Orissa has been a conquered nation. For eight centuries it was subject to the kings of Tilinga, and, in modern times, it was for fifty years under the sway of the Bhoslas of Nagpur, both of whom left deep impressions of their rule upon the country. On the language they imposed a number of Telugu and of Marāthī werds and idioms, respectively, which still survive. These are, so far as we know, the only foreign elements which have intruded themselves into Oriyā, except the small vocabulary of English court terms, and a few other English expressions, which English domination and education have brought into vogue.²

Oriyā is remarkably free from dialectic variation. The well-known saying, which is true all over the north of India, that the language changes Dialects. every ten kos, does not hold in Orissa. In Orissa proper, i.e., in what is known as the Mughalbandi, which consists of the regulation districts of Cuttack, Puri, and of the southern half of Balasore, the language is one and the same. Purists discover deflections from the recognised standard in Balasore and Cuttack, but these are very slight, and are merely local peculiarities, which are not worthy of the name of dialects. Three localities each claim to be the places where Oriya is spoken in its greatest purity, viz., Cuttack, Khurda in Puri, and Gumsar in the north of Ganjam. Khurda has the greatest claim to being considered the well of Oriyā undefiled. Cuttack, especially the town, is to a certain extent affected by Bengalisms, owing to the residence there of a number of Bengalis who have settled in the district for some generations, and the language of Gumsar is said to be affected by the neighbouring Telugu. Further south in Ganjam, the language becomes more and more subject to the influence of the last named language, so that not only is the vocabulary infected, but even the typical Telugu termination u is added by the uneducated to the genuine Oriya nouns, and the Telugu pronunciation of ch and j as if they were ts and z respectively is adopted universally. On the other hand, the Oriyā of North Balasore shows signs of being Bengalised, and, as we cross the boundary between that district and Midnapore, we find at length almost a new dialect. It is not, however, a true dialect. It is a mechanical mixture of corrupt Bengali and of corrupt Oriya. A man will begin a sentence in Oriya, drop into Bengali in its middle, and go back to Oriyā at its end. The vocabulary freely borrows from Bengali, and, in North-West Midnapore, even from the Santali which is spoken by the aborigines who there live among their Oriya-speaking neighbours. All this time, however, the language is Oriyā in its essence. It has put on strange clothes, like Peter in the 'Tale of a Tub,' but the heart that beats under the strangely embroidered waistcoat is the same. Nevertheless a person speaking this Midnapore Oriyā is often unintelligible to a man from Puri, and vice versá. According to Babu Monmohan Chakravarti, this mutual unintelligibility is due, not so much to actual change in the language as to differences of pronunciation. In Bengali, the accent is thrown back as far as possible, and, to assist this, the succeeding syllables are contracted or slurred over in pronunciation. The same method of pronunciation is affected by the speakers of Midnapore Oṛiyā. In true Oṛiyā, on the other hand, every syllable is distinctly pronounced, and the accent is put on the penultimate syllable if it is a long one, and never further back than the antepcnultimate. Thus the pure Oṛiyā ṭaṅkāē which has the accent on the penultimate syllable, has that accent transferred to the first syllable in Midnapore, all the following syllables being consequently shortened, and the word is pronounced as if it were ṭáṅke. In Midnapore, too, the written characters are changed. Sometimes the Oṛiyā character is frankly abandoned, and the language is written in the Bengali character. At other times, when the Oṛiyā character is used, it is changed by an angular shape being given to the curved tops which are so indicative of Oṛiyā writing.

In the north of Orissa, there is a tendency to use Bengali words and idious which we do not notice in the South. The influence of the Muhammadan languages of Upper India has been very small in Oriya.

These Bengali settlers in Cuttack and Balasore have developed a curious jargon of their own, their ancestral language being interlarded with Oriyā and Hindī expressions. Owing to their frequent use of the word karē, a corruption of the Oriyā karī, their speech is vulgarly known as kērā Bengali. In former times sales of Orissa estates for arrears of land-revenue were held in Caloutta, and the purchasers were frequently Calcutta Bengalis, who became the ancestors of the present-day speakers of this mongrel language, which has in its turn re-acted on the local Oriyā.

In the west, in Sambalpur, and the Chhattisgarh Feudatory States, there are also slight changes of pronunciation, but not to the same extent as in Midnapore. The pronunciation is said to be 'sharper,' by which it is probably meant that the round sound of a, which, in pure Oriyā, is something like that of the o in hot, is gradually approaching the flatter sound of the a in America, which is the sound that the vowel has in the adjoining Chhattīsgarhī. On this point, I have, however, no certain information.

In the extreme north-west, in the Native State of Jashpur, where the Oriyā language is spoken it is mixed with the Bihārī spoken in the same State, much as it is mixed with Bengali in Midnapore.

Finally, we come upon a genuine dialect of Oṛiyā in the north-east of the Native State of Bastar. The main language of that State is Halbī, which is a dialect of Marāṭhī. Immediately to its east, the language is Oṛiyā, but in the north-east of the State the Bhatrī dialect, which is a true dialect of Oṛiyā, forms the connecting link between that language and the Marāṭhī Halbī. It is reported to be spoken by 17,387 people. It is written, not in the Oṛiyā character, but in the Dēva-nāgarī used for Marāṭhī.

The following account of Oriyā literature is taken from Volume I of Mr. Beames'
Oriyā literature. Comparative Grammar, pages 88 and 89:—

Oriyā literature begins with Upēndra-Bhanja, who was a brother of the Rājā of Gumsar, a petty hill-state in the south of Orissa, which even to the present day is celebrated as the home of the purest form of the language. This voluminous poet composed a great number of religious works, many of which are still highly esteemed. His date is not exactly known, but he is supposed to have lived about three hundred years ago. I have a list of thirty of his productions, two of which are rhyming dictionaries, the Sabdamālā and Gītābhidāna; the rest are episodes from the ancient Pauranic legends, erotic poems, and panegyrics on various gods. They are stated to be generally disfigured by gross indecency and childish quibblings about words, endless repetitions, and all sorts of far-fetched rhetorical puzzles. Dīna-kṛushna Dāsa, a poet of the same age, is the author of the Rasakallōļa, the most celebrated poem in the language; the versification of which is its chief merit, being fluent and graceful. The subject-matter, however, is obscene, and contains very little that is new or original. There are also numerous paraphrases of well-known Sanskrit works, such as Bhagavadgītā, Rāmāyaṇa, Padma Purāṇa, and Lakshmī Purāṇa.

'In modern times a few prose works have been composed of considerable merit, but no originality, being either translations or adaptations from the English or Bengali.

The Oriyas are beginning to wake up, but none of them have yet received sufficient cultivation to make them really good authors. Nor is there much demand for vernacular literature—the Oriya seldom reads, and not one man in a hundred can write his native language without falling into the grossest errors of spelling and grammar at every turn.'

Grand Total of people who speak Oriya in India

I am not aware of any very old reference to the Oriya Language. The Sprachmeister and the Alphabetum brammhanicum are both silent concerning it. Yule and Burnell, in Hobson-Jobson, give two references to the country of 'Orisa' in works dating 1516 and 1568 respectively, but no similar reference for the name of the language. The earliest account of the language with which I am acquainted is in H. T. Colebrooke's Essay On the Sanscrit and Prácrit Languages, in Vol. vii, 1799, of the Asiatic Researches, p. 225.2 Here there is a brief description of Oriya and its peculiar written character. The following are the more modern works dealing with the language. I know of nothing published on the subject between Colebrooke's essay, and Sutton's grammar published in 1831.

Oriyā is encumbered with the drawback of an excessively awkward and cumbrous written character. This character is, in its basis, the same Written character. as Deva-nagari, but is written by the local scribes with a stylus on a talipot palm-leaf. These scratches are, in themselves, legible, but in order to make them more plain, ink is rubbed over the surface of leaf and fills up the furrows which form the letters. The palm-leaf is excessively fragile, and any scratch in the direction of the grain tends to make it split. As a line of writing on the long, narrow, leaf is necessarily in the direction of the grain, this peculiarity prohibits the use of the straight top line, or mātrā, which is a distinguishing characteristic of the Dēva-nāgarī character. For this, the Orissa scribe is compelled to substitute a series of curves, which almost surround each letter. It requires remarkably good eyes to read an Oriya printed book, for the exigencies of the printing press compel the type to be small, and the greater part of each letter is this curve, which is the same in nearly all, while the real soul of the character, by which one is distinguished from another, is hidden in the centre. and is so minute, that it is often difficult to see At first glance, an Oriya book seems to be all curves, and it takes a second look to notice that there is something inside each.

376 OŖIYĀ.

Alphabet.—The order and number of the vowels and consonants are the same in Oriyā as in the other Aryan languages of India. The following is the system of transliteration adopted for this language:—

VOWELS.

ય વ	ય ā	\mathcal{Q}_{i}	Q ī	છ્ ૫	ତ୍ୟ 🕏
રુ ૧૫	ą rū	s ļu	z ļū	∢ ē	A ai
(3 ō	(3) au	zo ang	zie ah.

CONSONANTS.

e ka	s kha	ଗ ga	a gha	g na
o cha	g chha	କ୍ର $m{j}a$	g jha	ģ ña
à ta	0 tha	ତ da	s dha	d na
\circ ta .	el tha	ଦ da	્ય dha	ନ na
a pa	or pha	Θ ba	g bha	g ma
$\Im ya$	Дja	ର ra	ଲ୍ la	ଲ୍ଲାa ବ wa
દા કેલ	es sha	21 84	o ha	s khya.

Although, for the sake of completeness, the vowel signs $Q r\bar{u}$, z lu, and $z l\bar{u}$ are included in the list of characters, they are not used at all in ordinary Oriyā. They are, however, required in transcribing Sanskrit grammatical works into the Oriyā character, and in Sanskrit grammars written for the use of Oriyā students.

The forms of the vowels given above are the initials, and are used only at the beginning of a word or syllable; when subjoined to a consonant they take the following forms:—

a (not expressed) \bar{a} |, i , \bar{i} |, u , \bar{u} , $\bar{r}u$, \bar{e} \bar{c} , ai \bar{c} , o \bar{c} |, au \bar{c} |. Thus \hat{a} ka, \hat{a} or \hat{a} ki, \hat{a} $k\bar{i}$, \hat{a} ku, \hat{a} $k\bar{u}$, \hat{a} $k\bar{u}$ \hat{a} $k\bar{u}$, \hat{a} $k\bar{u}$ \hat{a} $k\bar{u}$

In using these non-initial vowels, there are a few irregularities.

 $|\bar{a}|$ is often combined with the curve of the consonant into one letter, thus $\mathbb{Q}|$ or $\mathbb{Q}|$ $bh\bar{a}$. When this occurs the form of the consonant is sometimes altered slightly, so as to prevent confusion with other letters. Thus cha is \mathbb{Q} , but $ch\bar{a}$ is $\mathbb{Q}|$ or \mathbb{Q} , the ℓ being added in the second form to prevent confusion with $\mathbb{Q}|a$. So $\mathbb{Q}|ra$ becomes $\mathbb{Q}|$ or $\mathbb{Q}|r\bar{a}$, the tail of $\mathbb{Q}|$ being transferred to the body of the letter. Similarly $\mathbb{Q}|la$ becomes $\mathbb{Q}|$ or $\mathbb{Q}|l\bar{a}$.

As seen above, the sign, for i is often combined with the top curve as in $\widehat{\varsigma}$ or $\widehat{\varsigma}$ ki. Moreover, this letter sometimes takes the form 4 as in $\widehat{\varsigma}$ or $\widehat{\varsigma}$ dhi and $\widehat{\varsigma}$ or $\widehat{\varsigma}$ thi. So the sign $\widehat{\varsigma}$ for $\widehat{\imath}$ is sometimes combined with the consonant, as in $\widehat{\varsigma}$ or $\widehat{\varsigma}$ li.

The sign $_{\star}$ for u is often written $_{\star}$, as in the first specimen.

When the consonant follows another with no vowel between, the two are, as in the Bengali and Dēva-nāgarī alphabets, combined into one compound letter. In most cases the elements of the compound are easily distinguishable $\frac{1}{2}$ kla $\frac{1}{3}$ gdha; but there are some in which the elements are so altered as to be with difficulty recognised.

ORIYĀ. 377

The most commonly met with are the following:

- (1) Nasals preceding other consonants:—
- se in usually takes the forms of two small circles written respectively at the top righthand corner and at the bottom left-hand corner of the letter with which it is combined.

(3) Miscellaneous	:

The letter q ya when following another consonant is written 4 by the side of the letter with which it is combined. Thus On tya.

When the letter Q wa follows another letter it is always pronounced wa (elsewhere it is always pronounced ba), and is written under the letter with which it is combined. Thus 9 swa.

When the letter & ra precedes a consonant it is written above the letter with which it is combined. Thus & rja. When it follows a consonant, it takes the form and is written below, as in 9 dra. For hra and tra, see below.

The compound stu takes the altogether anomalous form of q.

As in Sanskrit and Bengali, the short vowel z a when it follows a consonant is not expressed, but is held to be inherent in every consonant unless its absence is specially indicated; for instance z is ko, not k. When the absence of z a has to be noted, the mark (called in Oriyā hasanta) is used; thus z k, as shown in the above list of compound consonants.

The sign, called chandra-bindu (i.e., moon and drop), indicates that a nasal sound is given to the vowel over which it stands as in $z \in achh\tilde{u}$, we are. It is represented, in transliteration, by the sign \sim over the nasalized vowel.

The characters for the numerals are these-

7	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	0

Pronunciation.—The pronunciation of the vowels is much the same as in Bengali. The short a is usually pronounced like the o in hot or hod (not, however, so positively as in Bengali), and at the end of a word, like the second o in promote. According to purists, it is pronounced, as in Hindī, like the u in nut, but even those who teach this admit that it is a counsel of perfection. The main difference in this respect between Oriyā and Bengali consists in the pronunciation of the vowel \mathfrak{A} , corresponding to the Bengali \mathfrak{A} , and the Sanskrit \mathfrak{A} . This is pronounced ru, not ri, and will be transliterated ru. The diphthongs ai and au are, as in Bengali, pronounced as the oi in oil, and the ou in house respectively. I have found no record in Oriyā of the broken vowels, a, e, and o which are so common in Bengali.

There is one most important difference between Oriyā and Bengali, which affects nearly every word in the language. In pure Oriyā the final a at the end of a word is always pronounced. Thus in Oriyā বার a house is pronounced ghara, or rather ghŏrō, but in Bengali ঘর is pronounced ghar (ghŏr).

OŖIYĀ. 379

As a rule the pronunciation of the consonants is much clearer in Oriyā than in Bengali. There is not that elision of a y or v at the end of a compound consonant, which is so prominent a feature in the latter language.

There is a tendency to pronounce the letters Q cha and Q chha, as if they were tsa and tsha respectively. This is not so marked in Orissa proper, as in the country south of Puri. In Southern Oriyā, they are regularly pronounced tsa and tsha except when the vowel $e, \bar{e}, i,$ or \bar{i} follows, when they have their proper sound. Thus QQ, go on, is pronounced $ts\bar{a}la$, but QQ a letter chiṭāu. So QQ $tshat\bar{a}$, an umbrella, but QQ $chhid\bar{a}$, standing. Similarly there is a tendency, which becomes more and more accentuated as we go south to pronounce Q ja and Q jha as if they were dza and dzha, but not before e, \bar{e}, i , or \bar{i} . Thus in the south QQQ $dz\bar{a}la$, a net, QQQ $dzh\bar{a}la$, perspiration; but QQQ $jinib\bar{a}ra$, to conquer, and QQ jhia, a daughter.

The pronunciation of the cerebral letters is much more pure than in Bengali or Hindī. \odot and \odot are pronounced both as da and dha respectively and as ra and rha respectively. In the latter case, a dot is put under them. As we go south the r sound disappears. Thus 'it will fall,' is pariba in Cuttack, but padiba (something like $porddib\bar{o}$) in Puri.

In Bengali, the cerebral \P na has altogether lost its true sound, and is pronounced exactly as the dental \P na. In Oriyā Π na has preserved its true sound, as a strongly burred n, almost like nr pronounced through the nose, as we hear it in Western India, and in correctly pronounced Sanskrit. The best way of giving an idea of its pronunciation is to say that the pronunciation of the Oriyā word Π kana is what would be represented in Bengali by Π karō.

 \mathfrak{A} , as in other Eastern Indo-Aryan languages, has two sounds that of ya and that of ja. The second is derivative, just as the English have corrupted 'Yehovah' to 'Jehovah.' When it is pronounced as ja, I shall henceforth transliterate it as ja, so as to distinguish it from \mathfrak{A} ja. When \mathfrak{A} is pronounced as ya, the Oriyās affix to it the sign \mathfrak{A} , so that there are practically two letters, viz, \mathfrak{A} ja and \mathfrak{A} ya.

The letter Ω l, which is found in the middle or at the end of certain words, is pronounced with the tongue inverted against the palate. We hear it in London in the morning cry of 'milk,' pronounced 'mulk' (u as in nut).

The letter $\mathfrak P$ is pronounced as b except when in combination with other letters, when it is a clear w, as on $\mathfrak P \mathfrak P$ swara, a voice.

Of the three sibilants, \mathfrak{S} \mathfrak{S} , and \mathfrak{S} \mathfrak{S} are both properly pronounced as the \mathfrak{S} \mathfrak{h} in 'shell,' and \mathfrak{S} as the \mathfrak{S} in 'sin'; but in practice, they are all three pronounced alike, as the \mathfrak{S} in 'sin,'—thus exactly reversing the Bengali practice.

The letter s which is properly ksha, is pronounced, and transliterated, khya.

The compound $\mathbf{e} j\tilde{n}a$ is pronounced $gy\tilde{a}$, and is so transliterated.

So also the compound of mha is pronounced mbha, and is so transliterated.

It is believed that the following grammatical sketch will enable the reader to understand the interlinear translations of the Oriyā specimens which follow.

Loc. Voc.	purus ha-ṭhārē hē purusha	purusha-mānaṅka-ṭhārē hē purusha-mānē		purushanka-thārē

In the Instrumental $d\bar{e}i$ or karttruka may be substituted for $dw\bar{a}r\bar{a}$.

Instead of $m\bar{a}n\bar{e}$, nouns of multitude like dala or $l\bar{o}ka$ may be used to form the plural. When these are added, the noun is declined as if in the Singular.

Nouns ending in $\bar{\imath}$, shorten it in the other cases; as $sw\bar{a}m\bar{\imath}$, a hasband; Acc. Sing. $sw\bar{a}mi$ -ku, Nom. Plur. $sw\bar{a}mi$ -manē.

(2) Irrational beings, and common nonns without life.

ghara, a house.

	Sing.	Plur.
Nom. Acc. Instr. Dat. Abl. Gen. Loc.	ghara ghara-rē ghara-ku ghara-ru or gharu ghara-ra gharē, ghara-rē	Usually found by adding noun of multitude, such as sabu, or sakaļa, all. If māna is used, the nom. plur. is māna, not mānē.

If a noun ends in \bar{a} , i, or u, the locative ends only in $r\bar{e}$; thus $gh\bar{o}_{\bar{i}}\bar{a}$ - $r\bar{e}$, on a horse; $pasu - r\bar{e}$, in a beast.

Explotive additions,—ta is added to give emphasis, as in $b\bar{a}pa$ -ta $s\bar{e}$ - $th\bar{a}r\bar{e}$ $thil\bar{e}$, it was father who was there. The snffix $t\bar{a}$ or ti has the force of a definite article. The first is nsed with irrational beings and things, the second with rational beings : thus $ah\bar{a}r\bar{e}$ - $t\bar{a}r\bar{e}$ the horse $artl\bar{a}r\bar{e}$ things, the second with rational beings: thus $gh\bar{o}_{1}\bar{a}_{-1}\bar{a}_{,}$ the horse, $pil\bar{a}_{-1}i_{,}$ the child.

Adjectives rarely change for gender. Tatsamas in a sometimes change the a to \bar{a} or \bar{i} for the feminine; those in \bar{i} to \bar{i} to \bar{i} to \bar{i} and those in \bar{v} and \bar{v} and \bar{v} are \bar{v} and \bar{v} and \bar{v} are \bar{v} are \bar{v} and \bar{v} are \bar{v} are \bar{v} and \bar{v} are \bar{v} are \bar{v} are \bar{v} and \bar{v} are \bar{v} are \bar{v} and \bar{v} are \bar{v} are \bar{v} are \bar{v} and \bar{v} are \bar{v} are \bar{v} are \bar{v} are \bar{v} are \bar{v} are \bar{v} and \bar{v} are \bar{v} and \bar{v} are \bar{v} are \bar{v} are \bar{v} are \bar{v} are \bar{v} and \bar{v} are \bar{v} are \bar{v} are \bar{v} are \bar{v} are \bar{v} and \bar{v} are \bar{v} and \bar{v} are $\bar{v$

Kēhi, kēsē, Gen., kāhāri-ra, or kāhā-ra, Obl., kāhāri, means 'some one,' 'any one.' Its plural is kēhi kēhi, Obl. kāhāri kāhāri. Kichhi, anything, is regularly declined. So are amuka and thōkāe, both meaning 'a certain person.' Adjectival pronouns are ē, ēhi, this; sē, sēhi, that; jēŭ, which; and kēŭ, which?

The same expletive additions are used as in the case of nouns. Thus $t\bar{a}$ -ta, that exactly. Muhī means 'even I.' $J\bar{e}$ is often added expletively at the end of a sentence, as in $\bar{a}r\bar{e}$ Baidā, chāli $\bar{a}sa$, bhāta khāiba $j\bar{e}$, Baidā, come along, you will have to eat your rice. The cases are liable to contraction, as in the case of nonns, e.g., $m\bar{o}$ - $th\bar{u}$, from me. The syllable $h\bar{a}$ is often omitted, e.g., $t\bar{a}$ -ra for $t\bar{a}h\bar{a}$ -ra.

TIL-VERBS -

General Remarks.—When respect is intended, the plural is used instead of the singular. Colloquially l is frequently substituted for a and vice versă. Thus lēli for nēli, I took; luhē for nuhē, it is not; padhinē for padhilē, they read. Verbs are usually quoted in the genitive of the present verbal nonn.

A. Verbs Substantive only. These are not used as Auxiliary Verbs.

(b) Periphrastic tenses—

1. Present Definite; dēkhu-aehhī or dēkhu ehhī, I am seeing, and so on; negative, dēkhu-nuhē, I am not seeing; Imperfect, dēkhu-thūti, I was seeing, and so on; Habitual Imperfect, dēkhu-thūtī, I usually was seeing, I then was seeing; Fnture Conditional, dēkhu-thūtī, I may be seeing, I shall he seeing; Imperfect Conditional, dēkhu-thūtī, (if) I were seeing.

2. Perfect, dēkhi-achhī or dēkhi-chhī, I have seen; Pluperfect, dēkhi-thūtī, I had seen; Habitual Pluperfect, dēkhi-thūtī, I nsually had seen, I then had seen; Past-Futnre Conditional, dēkhi-thūtī, I may have seen; I shall have seen; Pluperfect Conditional, dēkhi-thūtī, (if) I had seen. dēkhi-thānti, (if) I had seen.

D. Irregular Verbs, jibā-ra, to go. Pres., jāē, etc., like thāē: Past, gali; Future, jimi or jibi. Verb. noun, jibā; Pres. part., jāu; Past Part., jāi; Contin. part., jāntē; Cond. part., galē.

Past Part., jāi; Contin. part., jānē; Cond. part., gatē.

Hēbā-ra and thibā-ra are given above.

Dēbā-ra, to give, has Present Sing. 1, dēaī; 2, dēu; 3, diē, dia; Plnr. 1, dēū; 2, diya; 3, diyanti; Past, dēli; Fut., dēbi; Habit. past, diyanti. Nēbā-ra, to take, is declined in the same way.

Piibā-ra, to drink, has Present Sing. 1, piyi; 2, piyu; 3, piyē; Plnr., 1, piyū; 2, piya; 3, piyanti.

The verhs karibā-ra, to do, māribā-ra, to strike, and āsibā-ra, to come, usually drop the last consonant of the root in the Past Tense and the Conditional Participle. Thus kali or karili, I did, kalē, if (I) had done; māili or mārili, I struck, māilē or mārilē, if (I) had struck; aēli (not āili) or āsili, I came; aïlē or āsilē, if (I) had come.

- E. Causal Verbs, add ā to the root, as dēkhāē, I canse to see. Roots ending in ā change that ā to u. Thus khāi, I eat, khuāi, I canse to The cansal of dēbā-ra, to give, is diyāibā-ra; of nēbā-ra, to take, niyāibā-ra; and of piibā-ra, to drink, piyāibā-ra.
 - F. Passive Voice. Formed by conjugating the present Verhal nonn in a, with jiba-ra, to go. Thus, dekhā jāi, I am seen.
- G. Expletive additions. The letter ta added gives emphasis, e.g., achhi-ta, I am indeed. Ti and ni are added without affecting the meaning much, as in tu jibu-ti, will you go; sē galē-ni, he has gone already.
 - H. Examples of the nse of the Relative Participles-1. mu-dēbā dhāna, the corn which I give.

 - 2. ghushuri-khau-thiba tashu, the husks which the swine are eating.

3. mu-dēlā ţankā, the rupee which I gave.
4. mu-dēi-thibā ṭankā, the rupee which I have given.

382 ORIYĀ.

The form of Oriyà spoken in the neighbourhood of Cuttack is usually considered to be the standard dialect of the language, though its claim is not universally admitted. Probably the purest Oriyā is spoken more to the south-west near Khurda.

The following two specimens come from Cuttack. The first is given in facsimile as well as in type, as a good example of clear Oriyā current hand-writing. The second is given in Oriyā type. Each is accompanied by a transliteration and a translation. The language is that shown in the preceding grammar. The only form in it which is not explained therein, nor, so far as I am aware, in any Oriyā Grammar is the word jāuņu, having gone. We may also note naïlā, he did not come, in the second specimen. A good example of the Relative Participle is ghushuri khāu-thibā tashu, literally, the swine-being-eaten husks, i.e., the husks which the swine are eating.

The second specimen is one of the most popular songs of Orissa, entitled the kēśaba-kōili, of Markaṇḍa-dāsa, which, according to Babu Monmohan Chakravartti, is probably more than three hundred years old, and is still taught to children in the schools.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

The song is supposed to be sung by Yaśōdā, the foster-mother of Kṛishṇa, after he had left Vṛindā-vana, in company with Akrūra, and had remained in Mathurā whither he had gone to kill the demon Kamsa. Nanda, Yaśōdā's husband, was Kṛishṇa's foster-father, and he had consented to Akrūra taking the child away. He and his wife, as well as all the inhabitants of Vṛindā-vana, where the God had spent his infancy and boyhood, were Gowālās by caste, and hence she calls the country round her home 'Gōpa-pura,' or the 'City of Cowherds.' One of Kṛishṇa's many names was Kēśava, and another was Gōvinda. He was the incarnation of the God Hari or Vishnu. His brother was Bala-rāma.

- 1. O Cuckoo, cuckoo. At whose words did Krishna go to Mathura? For my son has not returned.
- 2. O Cuckoo, cuckoo. To whom shall I now give sweets and thickened milk? For my son who used to eat it has gone to Mathura-town.
- 3. O Cuckoo, cuckoo. My son went and returned not; and the groves of Vrindavana have lost their charm.
- 4. O Cuckoo, cuckoo. Nanda no more loves my home: for no longer fair appears the dwelling without Govinda.
- 5. O Cuckoo, cuckoo. Surely Nanda's body was of stone, when he anointed Krishna's eyes with collyrium and put him sitting in the chariot.
- 6. O Cuckoo, cuckoo. When the maidens of Göpa-pura heard of his departure, they started, and the (bells of) their girdles shook.
- 7. O Cuckoo, cuckoo. I once struck him a single cane-blow (for some fault), and I fear that it was on account of that punishment that Krishna left me.
- 8. O Cuckoo, cuckoo. Akrūra came in the guise of a messenger. He seated Krishņa in the chariot deceitfully, and took him away on the excuse of some festival.
- 9. O Cuckoo, cuckoo. Mourning, mourning. I have no tears left. Kṛishṇa had ended his quarrels (with the demon), and has stayed in Mathurā.
- 10. O Cuckoo, cuckoo. At night-time (in his baby way) Hari used to ask for the moon, and raising his eyes, Nanda would call out to him *Come.'
- 11. O Cuckoo, cuckoo. Loudly used he to crow in my arms, and (gleefully) used he to shake as I rocked him.
- 12. O Cuckoo, cuckoo. A graceful pair were the two brothers; but Krishna has deceived me and has not come back.

Standard Oriyā is also spoken in the district of Balasore. Here, however, we may note a few provincialisms, though not sufficient to entitle the form of speech to be classed as a separate dialect. Some of the points of differences are of pronunciation. Others are of grammatical inflection due to the influence of the neighbouring Bengali of Midnapore.

As regards pronunciation, there is a tendency to drop the aspiration in the definite present and perfect tenses, so that achhi is spelt achi. Examples are nëi jāi-chi, he has carried off; palāi-chi, he has fled; hēi-chi, it has taken place; kāndu-chu, thou art weeping; karu-chu, thou art making. Note the way in which n is substituted for l, as in thinē for thilē, if it had been.

In the declension of nouns, the letter \tilde{e} added to the nominative gives the force of the indefinite article. Thus, $mun\dot{q}-\tilde{e}$, a lump: $din-\tilde{e}$, one day: $khan\dot{q}-\tilde{e}$, a piece. In one instance, we have the accusative ending in ka instead of ku, viz., in $sun\ddot{a}$ - $mun\dot{q}\ddot{a}$ -ka, (he carried off) the lump of gold.

In the declension of pronouns we find tuma-ra, instead of tumbha-ra, your.

It is unnecessary to give the Parable of the Prodigal Son in the Balasore dialect. The following short folk-tale shows the peculiarities to which attention has been drawn above. It is given in facsimile of the original writing, and is accompanied by a transliteration and a translation.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

A miser had some property, and was continually in fear that some thief would find it out and one fine day steal it. So, after much consideration, he sold all that he had, and having bought a lump of gold with the proceeds, buried it in the earth. Thereafter, he used to visit the spot regularly once a day, to see if anyone had taken it away. His servant observed his conduct, and smelt a rat. 'Perhaps,' thought he, 'he has something of value buried there. Otherwise, why should he make a point of going to the place every day?' So, one day, he found an opportunity, dug up the lump of gold, and ran off with it. Next day, up came the miser at the regular time, and saw that someone had made away with his gold. He beat his head and he tore his hair, and he wept crying, 'alack, alack, I'm altogether ruined.' A neighbour who saw him in this pickle asked him why he was weeping, and when he had understood the whole affair he said, 'brother, why are you weeping without a cause? Bury a stone in the same place, and make up your mind that it's your lump of gold. For, once you had made up your mind that you would not enjoy your wealth, what greater advantage had you from burying a lump of gold than from burying a stone?'

The Moral of this is that a buried talent is as good as no talent at all.

It is unnecessary to give any examples of the dialect spoken in the District of Puri. The language is exactly the same as that of Cuttack. The specimens received from it only differ from the Cuttack ones in that the language is more Sanskritised, a matter which depends a good deal on the idiosyncrasies of the writer. For instance putra is used instead of pua, a son, and $pit\bar{a}$, instead of $b\bar{a}pa$, a father. We should however remember that the letter Q is more commonly pronounced as a strongly cerebral d, in Puri, while, in Cuttack, its sound is more nearly that of r. This, at least, is the evidence borne by the specimens. In the transliteration received from Cuttack the word for 'he fell' is transliterated 'parila,' while in the specimens which come from Puri, it is spelt 'pardila.'

Similar remarks apply to the Oṛiyā spoken in the District of Angul and in the various Native States of Crissa. The Aryan language of the whole of this area is Standard Oṛiyā. The only difference is that of pronunciation. As already stated, the farther south we go, the greater is the tendency to prenounce ch as ts, and j as dz. So also while we find that the sound r is more common in the north, d is more common in the south. We may thus say that the Oṛiyā spoken over the whole of Orissa proper, including its Native States, is Standard Oṛiyā. It will of course be understood that other aboriginal languages especially Kandhī are also vernaculars of the area. But they do not appear to have affected Oṛiyā at all.

Oriyā is also spoken south of Orissa in the north of the districts of Ganjam and Vizagapatam, which belong to the Madras Presidency. This tract of country does not fall within the operations of the Linguistic Survey, but it may be stated that the Southern limit of Oriyā may be taken roughly as commencing at the small seaport town of Barwa in the District of Ganjam, and running first nearly due west and then south-west up to Tindiki on the border between Vizagapatam and Bastar. South of this line a corrupt Oriyā which is much mixed with Telugu is spoken by some of the lowest castes, but the language of the bulk of the population is Telugu. Thence it turns north so as to include the Jeypore Agency of Vizagapatam and the eastern half of the Chhattisgarh Division of the Central Provinces. The Oriyā of Ganjam and Jeypore is still the standard dialect. It is well illustrated in Mr. Maltoy's Handbook. The characteristic southern pronunciation is here prominent. The four first palatal letters are here clearly ts, tsh, dz, and dzh. The ch-and j-sounds are unknown. So also, we have always d and dh, and never r and rh. The common folk sometimes add the Telugu termination u to nouns, but this is not done by the educated.

Standard Oriyā is also the form of the language which is spoken in the Districts and Native States of the Central Provinces, in which Oriyā is the vernacular. From Raigarh in the north, to Kalahandi in the south, and from Raipur in the west to Bamra in the east, the language is exactly the same in its grammar. There is only a slight difference in pronunciation which we may notice, though it is not necessary to give specimens to illustrate the peculiarity. It is that in the extreme west of the Oriyā-speaking area, the influence of the neighbouring Chhattīsgarhī has led to the letter a not being pronounced at the end of a word. Thus, in Raipur, and the State of Sarangarh, the word for 'of a man' is janaka-r, not janaka-ra, and the word for 'younger' is sān, not sāna. Apparently also, the sound of the vowel a gradually loses the tone of the o in hot, as we go westwards, and approaches the sound of the a in America, which it has in the neighbouring Chhattīsgarhī.

It is hence hardly necessary to give specimens of the forms of speech spoken in this area. I shall content myself with giving the version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which has been received from the Native State of Kalahandi, which is nearly in the extreme south west of the Oriyā-speaking area. Here, it will be observed, a final a is pronounced.

Turning north to the Chota Nagpur Division and its Tributary States, we find that Oriyā is spoken in the District of Singhbhum, and in the States of Jashpur, Sarai Kalā, Kharsāwān, Gangpur, and Bonai. In the last two, it is the only Aryan language spoken in the States, but, in the others, the case is different. In Singhbhum, Oriyā is the Aryan language which is spoken over the whole District except Dhalbhum. But in the north, in the Chakradharpur Thana, immediately under the Chota Nagpur Plateau, the Magahī dialect of Bihārī is spoken by that portion of the population, which traces its original home to Chota Nagpur in the north. This part of the country is therefore bilingual. Next door neighbours may talk different home languages. The same is the case in the small States of Sarai Kalā and Kharsāwān, which are enclaves in the north of the Singhbhum District. As regards Jashpur, Oriyā is the language of the south of the State, where it borders on Gangpur. The northern portion of the State speaks, on the east, Nagpuria, a form of the Bhojpuri dialect of Bihari, and on the west, the Sargujiā form of Chhattīsgarhī. The Oriyā of Jashpur, being subject to the influence of both these languages is somewhat impure, and presents peculiarities which require illustration. In Singhbhum and the other Tributary States, the Oriyā spoken is the standard form of the language. In Singhbhum, the Bengali character is sometimes used for writing it, and all over this tract the only trace of the influence of the Bihārī language which lies to its north is the tendency to drop a final a, which we have already noticed in the most western form of Oriya spoken in Chhattisgarh. Thus, in Singhbhum, the word for 'of a man' is pronounced lokar, and not loka-ra, as it is pronounced in Orissa.

It is thus necessary to give specimens only of the form of Oriya spoken in Jashpur. It is spoken by an estimated number of 10,000 people.

The following specimens have been prepared by Babu Manmatha Nath Chatterji, Manager of the Jashpur State. The first is a translation of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, and the second a folktale. The character in which they are written differs slightly from that of standard Oriyā. Both are therefore given in facsimile of the original manuscript and each is accompanied by a transliteration and translation.

404 ORIYĀ.

The following are the main points in which the language of the specimens differs from the standard form of speech.

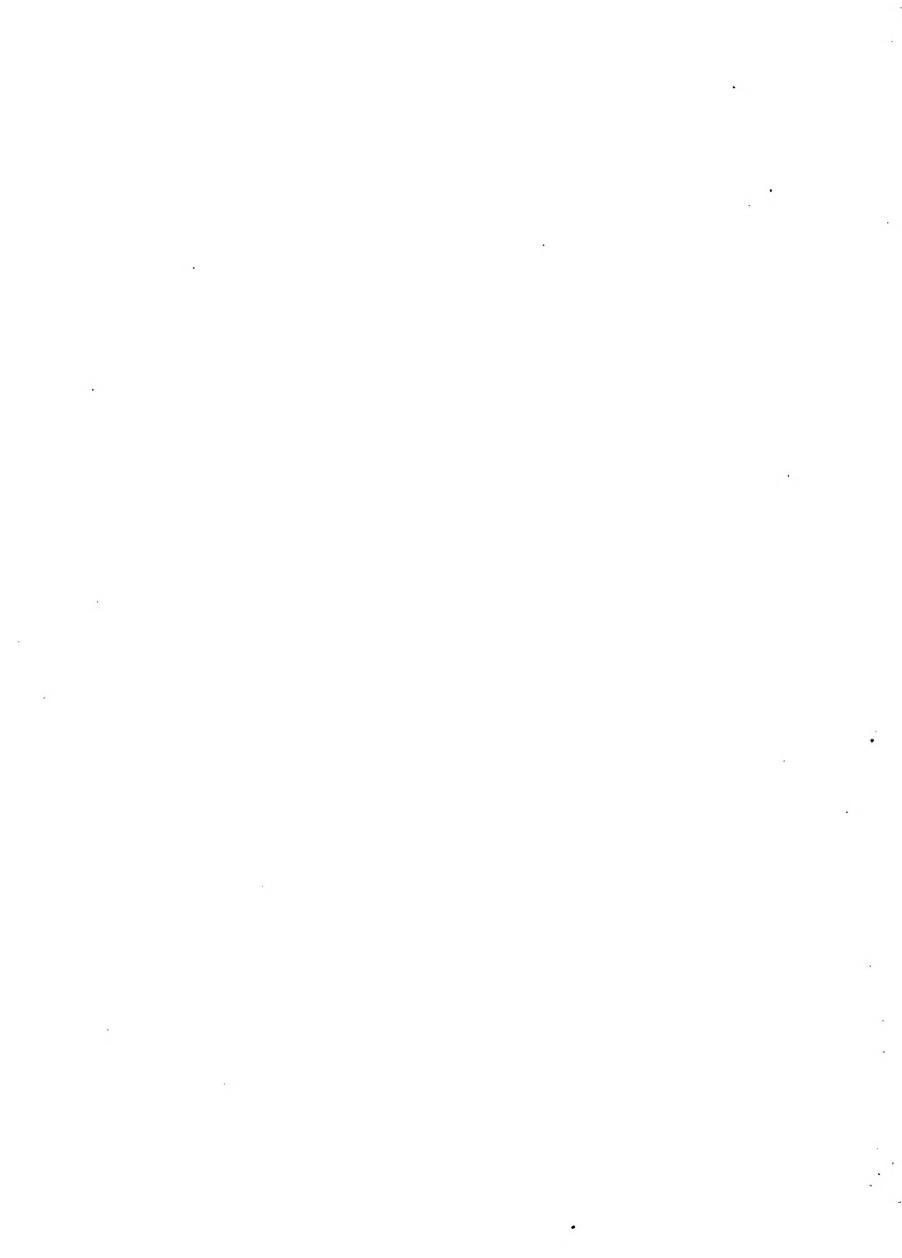

The letter a is sometimes written instead of \bar{o} . Thus, $mat\bar{e}$ instead of $m\bar{o}t\bar{e}$, to me. The letter n is substituted for l, as in $p\bar{a}un\bar{e}$ for $p\bar{a}ul\bar{e}$, if he had got; $kan\tilde{i}$, I did. The letter n in the middle of a word is pronounced n not n. Thus ban, instead of ban, great. Moreover, the two letters n and n are interconvertible, as in ban ban or ban but. This last is a corruption of the Bhojpuri ban

In the declension of nouns there are several irregularities. The nominative plural of pua, a son, is, in the second specimen, $pu\bar{e}$, thus recalling Hindī. Beside ku, the suffix of the dative is sometimes ki, as in $k\bar{a}h\tilde{i}-ki$, for what; $bh\bar{a}i-ki$, to the brother. The locative termination is often ra instead of $r\bar{e}$, thus resembling the genitive. Examples are $s\bar{e}$ -mulukha-ra, in that country; $jab\bar{a}ba$ -ra, in answer; bana-ra, in the forest. In the word $pad\bar{a}$ -ru, in the field, the ablative is used in the sense of the locative. In pronouns, note the form $t\bar{o}h\bar{o}r$, instead of $t\bar{o}$ -ra, thine.

In verbs, we meet $ha\ddot{\imath}l\bar{a}$, as well as $h\bar{e}l\bar{a}$, it became. $Nuh\tilde{o}ya$, is 'I am not.' In the past tense, we have $kan\tilde{\imath}$, for kali, I did. The tendency of the Standard dialect to drop a medial consonant in this tense is extended to the case of $ba\ddot{\imath}le$, they said, for $bal\dot{\imath}l\bar{e}$. Instead of $a\ddot{\imath}l\bar{e}$, we have $a\ddot{\imath}l\bar{e}$, they came, with the first a lengthened, or, rather, with the original long \bar{a} preserved.

The Habitual Past, which is also used as a Past, not a Present, Conditional, in this agreeing with Bihārī, differs widely from the Standard, and agrees more nearly with Bihārī. Examples are karati, I might have made (merry); karitũ, we should have made (merry): jānt, they used to go; balāt, they used to say. The following forms of the Present Definite are irregular, pāu-chhēi, I am getting; karu-chhēi, I am doing. The Conjunctive Past Participle with kari, which is common in Bihārī, also frequently occurs. Thus, jāi-kari, having gone; uṭhi-kari, having arisen, and many others.

The Potential Passive, formed by adding \bar{a} to the root, which is common in Bihārī, also occurs. Instances are $sun\bar{a}y$, it can be heard; and perhaps $kah\bar{e}b\bar{a}$ $l\bar{a}ekar$, worthy of being called.

The language of the Contai Sub-division of the Midnapore District is certainly Oriyā, but it is strongly corrupted by the Bengali spoken to the north across the river Haldi. It is not that a new dialect has been formed, partaking of some of the characteristics of each, and intermediate between each language. On the contrary, the language of the sub-division is a curious mixture of fairly pure Bengali and fairly pure Oriyā, the speakers using words of each language apparently at haphazard, and mixing them up into a kind of bilingual sentence. The basis of the language is Oriyā, that is to say, the majority of words and grammatical forms belong to it, while the rest are Bengali.

It is unnecessary to give full examples of this jargon, and the first few lines of the Parable of the Prodigal Son will be sufficient to show its character.

Judging from the local transliteration, which, in this respect, is reproduced in the transliteration annexed, the language hesitates between the Bengali custom of not pronouncing a final a, and the Oriyā one of pronouncing it. Thus, take the very first word jhan-kara. Here the final a of the Oriyā jhana is omitted, but it is retained at the end of kara. On the other hand, in the word tākara-man-kar, it is retained in tākara, which is itself hardly Oriyā, but is omitted at the end of kar. In this, too, the Oriyā has reverted to what was the original plural form man-kar, for mana-kara, instead of mankara. The suffix re of the locative has, as we also notice in Jashpur, become ra; and in madhyēra, we have a double locative, viz., first the Bengali locative madhyē to which has been added the Oriya locative termination ra. Takar is Bengalised from $t\bar{a}$ -kara, which is bad Oriyā for $t\bar{a}$ -ra. In $b\bar{a}p$ -ku, we have the proper Oriyā declension, but the final a of bāpa has been dropped. Next bisayēr is the Oriyā pronunciation of the pure Bengali bishayēr, instead of the Oriyā bishaya-ra. On the other hand, hīśyā is the Bengali attempt at representing the sound of hissā, i.e., hissā, and āmē is a compromise between the Bengali āmi, and the Oriyā āmbhē. Similarly ām-ku is shortened from āmbha-ku. Dina-ra and dēśa-ku are pure Orivā, while ār, and, is pure Bengali. In kari-kiri and jāi-kiri we have a true dialectic development, the suffix kiri, a corruption itself of the Bihārī kari, being used to form a conjunctive participle. Dabār is a compromise between the Bengali dibār and the Oriyā dēbā-ra, in which the vowel of the first syllable, being unaccented, has been allowed to go to the wall. In the phrase hēibē-lāgilā, the speaker has mixed up the Bengali haïtē-lāgila with the Oriyā hēbā-ku, or hōibā-ku-lāgilā. These examples serve to show the nature of this mongrel jargon. I have omitted from consideration most of the pure Oriya forms.

The specimen received from Contai was written in the Bengali character, which is another instance of the composite nature of the language. This character is not suited for writing Oṛiyā, as is shown by the way in which it has been found necessary to spell the word hissā.

422 ORIYĀ.

Besides the sub-division of Contai, Oriyā is also spoken in the south of Midnapore District, i.e., in the southern half of Thana Narayangarh, and in Thana Dantan.

It is also spoken in the west of the district by the Aryan population of Thanas Gopiballabhpur, Jhargaon, and Binpur. The non-Aryan population of these last Thanas and also of Thana Dantan, speaks Santali. The Oriyā of the south of the district is infected by Bengali peculiarities, and that of the west is infected by the language of the non-Aryan inhabitants, and has incorporated a certain number of Santali words into its vocabulary.

It will be sufficient to give one specimen, viz., a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son in the dialect of Dantan. It will be observed that though affected by Bengali, this has not occurred to nearly the same extent that we have observed in Contai. The form of the Oriyā character used in this part of Midnapore differs somewhat from the alphabet used in Balasore and Cuttack. The specimen is therefore given in the vernacular character in facsimile, as it was written down by a Dantan man. Besides variations in the actual shapes of the letters, it will be noticed that there is a strong tendency to give an angular shape to the top curve which is so characteristic of the Oriyā alphabet. The dialect of South Midnapore is sufficiently distinct from that of Orissa proper, to prevent the respective speakers of these dialects from being always mutually intelligible, and a similar want of mutual legibility exists between the written characters of the two tracts. There are numerous stories current whose points depend on the mistakes made by a speaker of one dialect when listening to a speaker of the other.

In the vernacular character a short i is often written as if it were a long $\bar{\imath}$. I have silently corrected this in the transliteration. As regards pronunciation, it will be seen that the Bengali influence is sufficiently strong to prevent the sounding of the vowel a when it occurs at the end of a word. In order to illustrate this, I have followed the local transliteration in every case in which a final a is written or omitted.

The following Bengalisms may be noted :-

- 1. The use of the present tense of the verb in a past sense, when accompanied by a negative. Thus, kari nāhĩ, I did not make; diya nāhĩ, you did not give.
- 2. The use of the Bengali infinitive, as in charāitē paṭhāi-dēlē, he sent him to feed; karitē lāgilē, they began to make; dēitē lāgilē, he began to give.
- 3. Miscellaneous idioms, such as pāoyā jāi-chhi, he has been found; harā hōi thilā, he had been lost; and others.

The following are dialectic forms.— $Hab\bar{a}$ -ru for $h\bar{e}b\bar{a}$ -ru, from becoming; $nah\tilde{u}$ for $n\bar{a}h\tilde{u}$, I am not; kari-achhanta, he has made; $p\bar{a}i$ -achhanta, he has got; and others.

BHATRI.

The Bhatras or Bhatras are an aboriginal tribe found almost solely in the north-east of the State of Bastar, between the Raipur and the Jagdalpur Zamindaries. They are cultivators, and a good many of them have the privilege of wearing the sacred thread. The number of Bhataras here found is 32,990. Ninety-seven more of them are found in British territory, so that the total number of the tribe according to the Census of 1891 was 33,087. They are said to be a sept of the Bastar Gonds, and Bhatri, or more properly Bhat rī, their language, has hitherto been classed as a form of Gondī. I have been able to obtain very little information about the tribe. Sherring in his Hindu Tribes and Castes (Vol. ii., p. 148) devotes three or four lines to it. Mr. Hislop, in the vocabulary printed in Papers relating to the Aboriginal Tribes of the Central Provinces gives a few words of what he names Bhatráin, and more full particulars are given on p. 41 of Part II of the Report of the Ethnological Committee of the Jubbulpore Exhibition of 1866-67. On pages 1, 10, and 12 of Part III of the same Report there are vocabularies of Parjī and Bhatri, which are treated as one and the same language. On p. 141 of the Census Report of the Central Provinces for 1891, Mr. Robertson with some hesitation classes Bhatrī as a Gōṇḍ dialect, but points out that Colonel Glasfurd considers it to be a form of Halabī. The latter officer's Report on the dependency of Bastar' contains a Bhuttra or Purja Vocabulary.

The following specimen will show quite clearly that Bhatrī is really a corrupt form of Oṛiyā, with a few Marāṭhī and Chattīsgaṛhī forms intermingled. It may be taken as the connecting link between that language and Halabi, which is a mixture of Marāṭhī and Chhattīsgaṛhī. The specimens given in the Report of the Ethnological Committee are apparently nearly all Dravidian words, and this is probably due to Bhatrī having been confounded by the Committee with Parjī, which latter, as the specimens which I have received show, is a Dravidian form of speech.

According to the Census of 1891, the total number of speakers of Bhatri is 29,396, all of whom inhabit the Bastar State. For the purposes of this Survey, the Bastar State has returned 17,387 speakers of the dialect. It must be explained that 8,000 speakers of Bhatri were also returned from the district of Chhindwara, but subsequent enquiry has shown that this is a mistake. There are no Bhatrias in the district. The following specimen, which comes from Bastar, is a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son.

It will be observed that it is written in the Dēva-Nāgarī, and not in the Oṛiyā character. A comparison with the list of words on pp. 441 and ff. will show that Marā-thī forms can be used much more freely than appears from the specimen. Note how this dialect omits aspirates. For instance ūkum, not hūkum, is 'an order,' and āchē, not achhē, is 'is.' Compare hōelā, haulā, and ōelā, all meaning 'he' or 'I became.'
